Stop! Look! Listen!

To ALL The Voters

Mr. Voter:—Tuesday, April 7th, 1914 is election day. I want you to go to the polls and cast your vote for me, which I assure you will be fully appreciated. I did not plan on running for any office this spring, but a number of people of all walks of life, including the faithful laborer, professional man, retired farmer and the business men came to me and asked me to become a candidate for Justice of the Peace. After giving the matter careful consideration for several months, I finally gave my consent to become a candidate, subject to the will of the people. My qualifications are a good education, trained in the law and I have the necessary experience; and I think and feel that I have given satisfaction and not only that, but I have always tried to be accommodating and to do the best that I could under each and every circumstance. I believe in a square deal for everyone and in justice to all and that the poor man has as many rights as the rich man. I also believe that all cases should be decided from the evidence produced in court and not by thoughts, desires, or convictions of a number of bystanders or gossipers, nor by my own personal likes or dislikes. I believe that a judge should not allow himself to become prejudiced one way or another before a case is fully tried out before him. My home is on the East side and my office is on the West side and I don't believe that this should make one iota of difference on how you vote. There is no set law or ordinance in this city that says that there must be a Justice of the Peace from each side of the river. Both of the Justices could either be on East side or the West side or one on each side. It is a custom, but not a law to have one office on each side. I am seeking to be a Justice of the Peace of the people. I also believe that the best qualified person should have the office regardless of whether he financially needs it or not. Square dealings and principles are more to be considered in a judicial office. I want the office and do not want to get skinned if I can help it. I want your vote and support. I thank you in advance for any assistance you may give me and remain yours truly,

EDWARD N. POMAINVILLE.

Eyes the Wrong Color.

The police picked up a young fellow on Monday who answered to the description of a lad who was wanted over in Michigan for forgery, the only thing that prevented his being shipped over there being that he had blue eyes instead of brown. The young fellow was 19 years of age, and admitted having slept in a majority of the c'ty lockups between this city and Chicago, but the fact that his eyes were the wrong color saved him from getting free transportation to the state of Michigan.

Death of Joseph Severns.

Pittsville Record: Joseph M. Severns died at the home of his brother, G. W. Severns, in this city, Friday of last week at 10 A. M. He had been sick about a week, and was seemingly little worse than at other times of late when he has been compelled to stop work and seek relief from a stomach trouble from which he has been a constant sufferer for the past three years.

The funeral services were conducted from the Congregational church Sunday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Rev. Vater officiating. The funeral was under the auspices of the I. O. O. F., of which he was a member.

Joseph M. Severns was born at Springfield, Illinois, July 18, 1853, and was nearly 61 years of age at the time of his death. He was the second child of Mr. and Mrs. J. Q. Severns, and came to Wisconsin and to Pittsville with his parents in 1858, at the age of 6, since which time he could be considered an almost constant resident here. He followed the usual vocation of the pioneer of the early days. He logged by contract during the winter and helped on the drive in the spring. When the mills came he busied himself with contract work for them. He was married in 1874 to Elaney Hanimel, at Pittsville, and from this union five children were born.

Safety First Pictures and Lecture.

H. L. Brownell of Chicago was in the city on Friday and that evening gave a lecture at the Ideal on the "Safety First" idea, a subject that has been attracting considerable attention of late, and one that should be of interest to every person no matter what his walk in life. There is no question but what we are living in a fast age, and that things in general are moving at a greater speed than they did a generation ago. In view of these facts, it is necessary to be more careful than it was years ago, but it would seem as if people were taking less care year after year, and as a consequence accidents are becoming much more frequent. Many who used to be afraid to cross a street because of horse traffic now dodge thru between automobile and trucks that move at a speed that was hardly accomplished by trains in the good old days. Safety First is a good slogan, and it should be observed more in the future than it has been in the past.

WOMEN TO VOTE ON NEW BOARD

At the ensuing election April 7th the voters of Columbia county outside of the cities of Portage and Columbus will elect a county board of education as provided by chapter 751 of the laws of 1913. Under the provision of the new law the county board of education shall consist of five members, all to be elected for the first time in April.

After their election they are to determine by lot which shall serve one, two, three, four or five years. One member will be elected annually thereafter. The law does not apply to cities having their own board of education and superintendent of schools and voters in these cities will have no voice in the matter of selecting the board.

It in no way effects or diminishes the powers and duties of the county superintendent.

Any person entitled to vote at a school election may vote for these officers, and such persons entitled to vote may hold office. This provision in the law makes women electors eligible.

Candidates shall be nominated by independent nomination papers and no party designation is permitted altho a principle may be printed on the ballot after the candidate's name. The principle shall be expressed in not more than five words, and shall not include the name of any political party.

As compensation the board members shall receive the same per diem as supervisors, not to exceed, however fifteen days. Among the more important powers of the board are the following:

(1) In all cases where there are more than one hundred schools in the county board of education district the board may appoint an assistant superintendent of schools, or a clerk and fix their salary.

(2) Organize, alter and consolidate school districts.

(3) Authorize parents living nearer to a school in an adjoining district to send their children to the nearest school, tuition fees to be paid by the district in which said parents reside.

(4) The county board of education may appoint, upon the nomination of the county superintendent, a board of examiners, not to exceed five persons, for the common school diplomas, prescribe its duties, fix the compensation of its members, and may limit the number of days in any year for which any member of said board of examiners may receive compensation.

(5) Each member of the county board of education shall devote not less than two days in each year to visiting and inspecting rural schools. Each member shall attend at least one of the annual meetings of the school board conventions of the county.

(6) The county board of education shall fix the salary of the county superintendent which shall not be less than $1,000 exclusive of expenses. It shall also audit and allow his expense account.

The county superindendent is an advisory member of the board. State aid in the sum of $500 is granted the board upon the certificate of the state superintendent, showing that they have filed their annual report.

Wins in Supreme Court.

The supreme court last week affirmed the judgment of the circuit court for Marquette county awarded Mrs. Louise Alexander $5,125 damages from the Soo railroad on account of the killing of her husband. The man, said to have been intoxicated, was driving home from Westfield when his team strayed onto the railroad track and he was hit by the train. The court held that regardless of the manner in which a man gets upon the railroad track and is damaged, if his getting upon the track is due in whole or in part to the failure of the railroad company to fence the railroad right of way that the company is liable for damages.

Drainage Cases Put Over.

Several cases that were to come up before Judge Park at this term of the circuit court have been postponed by the judge owing to the large amount of business on hand. It is expected that the cases will be taken up some time during the summer. These are mostly cases of the Wood County Drainage district and are by the people who are protesting against the proposed district.

Eggert-Natwick.

Miss Cecile Eggert and Albert Natwick surprised their friends and relatives in this city a bit by going to Chicago on Sunday and being married on Monday afternoon, the ceremony being performed by a Presbyterian minister.

Both of these young people are well and favorably known here, the bride being the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Eggert and the groom the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Natwick. They will make their home at Stevens Point where the groom is employed. The Tribune unites with their many friends in extending congratulations.

Committed Suicide.

John Novack of Big Flats committed suicide at Marshfield on Sunday by hanging himself in the woods near the waterworks. He had been working in the woods during the winter and was supposed to be on his way home. No reason is given for the rash act.

Petty Robbery Case.

Sneak thieves robbed the till of the east side pool room Saturday evening securing the sum of twelve dollars in change. The police have been unable to locate the culprit as yet.

Otto Roenius returned on Monday from Cleveland Ohio, where he attended the National Foundrymen's Convention.

Herman Dahlke has accepted the position as engineer at the Normington Bros. laundry.

Will Soon Start Building.

J. F. Weinberg of the Weinberg Construction company, has secured the lease of a piece of ground from the Soo railway company in the northern part of the city on which he will commence the erection of a shop in the near future. The building will be of frame construction and 40x70 feet in size. Mr. Weinberg will manufacture inside finish, door and window frames and other work of this character in this city, shipping it to its destination where he is doing construction work, which he considers will be cheaper than making it on the ground where it will be used.

SMALL WRECK ON SOO LINE

The train on the Soo Line that arrives in the city about 8:30 a. m., was wrecked about two miles south of Vesper on Tuesday morning, two passenger coaches and two freight cars being turned over into the ditch and smashed up to some extent.

The most remarkable part of the affair was the fact that nobody was seriously hurt, notwithstanding the fact that the passenger coaches had about thirty people in them.

It is supposed that the accident change in seed, So he sacked his seed locomotive, remained on the track and was not injured. With the aid of a caboose and a box car the passengers were brought to this city.

Slow Down on the Bridge.

Mayor Cohen has published in another column of the Tribune a notice to automobile owners and drivers of auto trucks that is a good thing He requests that these people slow down to eight miles an hour when crossing the bridge. This is a good rule, and if it is not observed by autoists, it should be enforced by the police. It is unquestionably a fact that nearly every auto crosses the bridge faster than it should. Owing to the narrowness of the structure and the large amount of traffic that it carries nearly every hour of the dayl, there is always danger to pedestrians and others. Many people who cross the bridge are apparently dead to the world in general, and they often start to cross the roadway without looking in either direction, and the result is that many accidents are narrowly averted.

One human life is worth more than all the time that would be saved in a generation in speeding across the bridge, and for this reason it is better to use a little caution in advance than to mourn over an accident after it happens. Many autoists whiz over the bridge at a speed that is hair-raising to a careful man, and seem to go on the theory that if a pedestrian gets caught it is his own fault. As there are a great many children cross the bridge every day who are of such tender age that they are not accountable for their actions, it is no more than right that more care should be taken in this matter. It would seem as if this were a matter that the public would not need to be warned of more than once, but it is entirely probable that a few arrests will have to be made before the public gets it thoroly seated on their minds.

A Victim of Misplaced Confidence.

One day recently a young fellow drifted into the sanctum of the Tribune and sung a doleful song about having come to the city to work in one of the local printing offices, only to find upon his arrival that another man occupied the position that he had expected to be in. As it was close to the noon hour and this young man claimed to be without the necessary funds with which to buy a meal, we advanced him the price, to-wit: 25c. Now, we want the public to understand that we do not regret the two bits in the least. In fact, it is probable that we have often spent a quarter that got us no more than did this one, but it seems that this young man, misguided young man, we might say, spent the two-bits for whiskey, thereby becoming intoxicated, and the result was that he was picked up by the police and eventually landed in jail to serve a ten day sentence for disorderly conduct. Is it necessary to say any more on the subject?

ANSWERS TO MISSING WORD CONTEST

First prize of $1.00 goes to Mrs. Kate G. Camp, R. D. No. 6, Grand Rapids, Wis., and the money now awaits her at the Tribune office.

Second prize of a year's subscription to the Tribune goes to Elmer Baldwin of 107 S. 15th Avenue, Grand Rapids.

The missing word was "our" in the Gottschalk & Anderson ad, and was found by a number of persons, altho not so many were succesful as the week before. Possibly the fact that the word was taken out of an ad that had been published one week may have made it more difficult to find, as most of the searchers appeared to be looking in the new ads. The interest that was taken in the matter was very gratifying and would indicate that the ads are being read very carefully by a large number of people. Nobody guessed which was the biggest little store in Grand Rapids, altho there were many answers to this part of the contest. The answer will be found in the space belonging to the merchant this week.

This week there is another missing word somewhere in the advertisements on that page, and to one goes a dollar and to the other a years subscription to the Tribune. If you are interested, write out your answer, seal it in an envelope and mail or deliver it to the Tribune office and you may get one of the prizes. Do not forget to put down the name of the ad, the number of the line in which the word is missing and to sign your name to your communication, giving your address. This last is very important, as a prize could not be awarded, unless we know the name of the person.

Will Debate Taxes.

The Catholic Foresters will hold another of their famous debates on Wednesday evening, the question being one which is before the taxpayers of this state at the present time and is causing much stir all over the state, it being "Resolved That The Present High Etate Tax is Justifiable."

Although the speakers on both sides refuse to discuss their points, it is expected that the Commissions, Boards and other state departments, not to forget the Income Tax and State Aid Highway Law and a few other of the many so called foolish measures taken by the recent legislatures will be torn to pieces and patched up again. It has been rumored that the Governor and some of the commissioners are becoming worried lest some of the very able speakers on this debate expose the extravagant methods used in conducting our state government. Whatever may be the misgivings of these worthy gentlemen, a red hot time is promised by the debaters because they have condescended to say that "They have the dope."

The speakers on the affirmative are: Lawrence Marcoux, Leo Barrett, William Rogers, Leonard Pascavis; and on the negative: Earl Hein Harry Kempfert, Joseph Perdzock, and F. M. Schnabel, all of them very able talkers.

It has been noticed that Speaker Perdzock has been sampling all of the best brands of cigars during the last few days and it is expected that he will have a liberal supply of the best brand for the meeting Wednesday evening. We have been told that he will also furnish something good to eat which sounds very good.

Will Have Opposition.

Marshfield News: Mayor Felker, who has been in the field for a few weeks for re-election, will have opposition, which developed Monday with the announcement that Dr. Knilans will be a candidate for the office.

Dr. Knilans is an alderman of the Fifth ward, now serving his second term, and is one of the successful dentists of the city. He became a resident of this city eleven years ago. He also is prominent in fraternal circles, being the exalted ruler of the Elks lodge and a past master of the Masonic lodge.

Entertainment Course Coming.

The Grand Rapids Young People's Union has completed arrangements with the Mutual Lyceum Bureau of Chicago for an attractive high class enterainment course to be given during the fall and winter months. The course will consist of a variety of attractions which promise to prove educational as well as entertaining, and will be given by well known capable talent.

Stop! Look! Listen!

To ALL The Voters

Mr. Voter:—Tuesday, April 7th, 1914 is election day. I want you to go to the polls and cast your vote for me, which I assure you will be fully appreciated. I did not plan on running for any office this spring, but a number of people of all walks of life, including the faithful laborer, professional man, retired farmer and the business men came to me and asked me to become a candidate for Justice of the Peace. After giving the matter careful consideration for several months, I finally gave my consent to become a candidate, subject to the will of the people. My qualifications are a good education, trained in the law and I have the necessary experience; and I think and feel that I have given satisfaction and not only that, but I have always tried to be accommodating and to do the best that I could under each and every circumstance. I believe in a square deal for everyone and in justice to all and that the poor man has as many rights as the rich man. I also believe that all cases should be decided from the evidence produced in court and not by thoughts, desires, or convictions of a number of bystanders or gossipers, nor by my own personal likes or dislikes. I believe that a judge should not allow himself to become prejudiced one way or another before a case is fully tried out before him. My home is on the East side and my office is on the West side and I don't believe that this should make one iota of difference on how you vote. There is no set law or ordinance in this city that says that there must be a Justice of the Peace from each side of the river. Both of the Justices could either be on East side or the West side or one on each side. It is a custom, but not a law to have one office on each side. I am seeking to be a Justice of the Peace of the people. I also believe that the best qualified person should have the office regardless of whether he financially needs it or not. Square dealings and principles are more to be considered in a judicial office. I want the office and do not want to get skinned if I can help it. I want your vote and support. I thank you in advance for any assistance you may give me and remain yours truly,

EDWARD N. POMAINVILLE.

Eyes the Wrong Color.

The police picked up a young fellow on Monday who answered to the description of a lad who was wanted over in Michigan for forgery, the only thing that prevented his being shipped over there being that he had blue eyes instead of brown. The young fellow was 19 years of age, and admitted having slept in a majority of the city lockups between this city and Chicago, but the fact that his eyes were the wrong color saved him from getting free transportation to the state of Michigan.

FORCED TO SELL.

—The Big Stock of Clothing of the Leader Clothing Store must positively be sold out by Saturday night, April 11th.

Everything must be cleaned up regardless of cost and the slaughter of prices that has been going on for the past week will continue until everything is sold out.

Remarkable Bargains

Those who have attended have been well satisfied with the goods and prices and we have had a big crowd in our store every day, but our stock was large and there is still a lot of goods left that must be sold. Every mother in the city should call at our store, and lay in a supply.

Death of Joseph Severns.

Pittsville Record: Joseph M. Severns died at the home of his brother, G. W. Severns, in this city, Friday of last week at 10 A. M. He had been sick about a week, and was seemingly little worse than at other times of late when he has been compelled to stop work and seek relief from a stomach trouble from which he has been a constant sufferer for the past three years.

The funeral services were conducted from the Congregational church Sunday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Rev. Vater officiating. The funeral was under the auspices of the I. O. O. F., of which he was a member.

Joseph M. Severns was born at Springfield, Illinois, July 18, 1853, and was nearly 61 years of age at the time of his death. He was the second child of Mr. and Mrs. J. Q. Severns, and came to Wisconsin and to Pittsville with his parents in 1858, at the age of 5, since which time he could be considered an almost constant resident here. He followed the usual vocation of the pioneer of the early days. He logged by contract during the winter and helped on the drive in the spring. When the mills came he busied himself with contract work for them. He was married in 1874 to Elaney Hammel, at Pittsville, and from this union five children were born.

Safety First Pictures and Lecture.

H. L. Brownell of Chicago was in the city on Friday and that evening gave a lecture at the Ideal on the "Safety First" idea, a subject that has been attracting considerable attention of late, and one that should be of interest to every person no matter what his walk in life. There is no question but what we are living in a fast age, and that things in general are moving at a greater speed than they did a generation ago. In view of these facts, it is necessary to be more careful than it was years ago, but it would seem as if people were taking less care year after year, and as a consequence accidents are becoming much more frequent. Many who used to be afraid to cross a street because of horse traffic now dodge thru between automobile and trucks that move at a speed that was hardly accomplished by trains in the good old days. Safety First is a good slogan, and it should be observed more in the future than it has been in the past.

WOMEN TO VOTE ON NEW BOARD

At the ensuing election April 7th the voters of Columbia county outside of the cities of Portage and Columbus will elect a county board of education as provided by chapter 751 of the laws of 1913. Under the provision of the new law the county board of education shall consist of five members, all to be elected for the first time in April.

After their election they are to determine by lot which shall serve one, two, three, four or five years. One member will be elected annually thereafter. The law does not apply to cities having their own board of education and superintendent of schools and voters in these cities will have no voice in the matter of selecting the board.

It in no way effects or diminishes the powers and duties of the county superintendent.

Any person entitled to vote at a school election may vote for these officers, and such persons entitled to vote may hold office. This provision in the law makes women electors eligible.

Candidates shall be nominated by independent nomination papers and no party designation is permitted although a principle may be printed on the ballot after the candidate's name. The principle shall be expressed in not more than five words, and shall not include the name of any political party.

As compensation the board members shall receive the same per diem as supervisors, not to exceed, however fifteen days. Among the more important powers of the board are the following:

(1) In all cases where there are more than one hundred schools in the county board of education district the board may appoint an assistant superintendent of schools, or a clerk and fix their salary.

(2) Organize, alter and consolidate school districts.

(3) Authorize parents living nearer to a school in an adjoining district to send their children to the nearest school, tuition fees to be paid by the district in which said parents reside.

(4) The county board of education may appoint, upon the nomination of the county superintendent, a board of examiners, not to exceed five persons, for the common school diplomas, prescribe its duties, fix the compensation of its members, and may limit the number of days in any year for which any member of said board of examiners may receive compensation.

(5) Each member of the county board of education shall devote not less than two days in each year to visiting and inspecting rural schools. Each member shall attend at least one of the annual meetings of the school board conventions of the county.

(6) The county board of education shall fix the salary of the county superintendent which shall not be less than $1,000 exclusive of expenses. It shall also audit and allow his expense account.

The county superindendent is an advisory member of the board. State aid in the sum of $500 is granted the board upon the certificate of the state superintendent, showing that they have filed their annual report.

Wins in Supreme Court.

The supreme court last week affirmed the judgment of the circuit court for Marquette county awarded Mrs. Louise Alexander $5,125 damages from the Soo railroad on account of the killing of her husband. The man, said to have been intoxicated, was driving home from Westfield when his team strayed onto the railroad track and he was hit by the train. The court held that regardless of the manner in which a man gets upon the railroad track and is damaged, if his getting upon the track is due in whole or in part to the failure of the railroad company to fence the railroad right of way that the company is liable for damages.

Drainage Cases Put Over.

Several cases that were to come up before Judge Park at this term of the circuit court have been postponed by the judge owing to the large amount of business on hand. It is expected that the cases will be taken up some time during the summer. These are mostly cases of the Wood County Drainage district and are by the people who are protesting against the proposed district.

Eggert-Natwick.

Miss Cecile Eggert and Albert Natwick surprised their friends and relatives in this city a bit by going to Chicago on Sunday and being married on Monday afternoon, the ceremony being performed by a Presbyterian minister.

Both of these young people are well and favorably known here, the bride being the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Eggert and the groom the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Natwick. They will make their home at Stevens Point where the groom is employed. The Tribune unites with their many friends in extending congratulations.

Committed Suicide.

John Novack of Big Flats committed suicide at Marshfield on Sunday by hanging himself in the woods near the waterworks. He had been working in the woods during the winter and was supposed to be on his way home. No reason is given for the rash act.

Petty Robbery Case.

Sneak thieves robbed the till of the east side pool room Saturday evening securing the sum of twelve dollars in change. The police have been unable to locate the culprit as yet.

Otto Roenius returned on Monday from Cleveland Ohio, where he attended the National Foundrymen's Convention.

Herman Dahlke has accepted the position as engineer at the Normington Bros. laundry.

Will Soon Start Building.

J. F. Weinberg of the Weinberg Construction company, has secured the lease of a piece of ground from the Soo railway company in the northern part of the city on which he will commence the erection of a shop in the near future. The building will be of frame construction and 40x70 feet in size. Mr. Weinberg will manufacture inside finish, door and window frames and other work of this character in this city, shipping it to its destination where he is doing construction work, which he considers will be cheaper than making it on the ground where it will be used.

SMALL WRECK ON SOO LINE

The train on the Soo Line that arrives in the city about 8:30 a. m., was wrecked about two miles south of Vesper on Tuesday morning, two passenger coaches and two freight cars being turned over into the ditch and smashed up to some extent.

The most remarkable part of the affair was the fact that nobody was seriously hurt, notwithstanding the fact that the passenger coaches had about thirty people in them.

It is supposed that the accident change in seed, So he sacked his seed locomotive, remained on the track and was not injured. With the aid of a caboose and a box car the passengers were brought to this city.

Slow Down on the Bridge.

Mayor Cohen has published in another column of the Tribune a notice to automobile owners and drivers of auto trucks that is a good thing He requests that these people slow down to eight miles an hour when crossing the bridge. This is a good rule, and if it is not observed by autoists, it should be enforced by the police. It is unquestionably a fact that nearly every auto crosses the bridge faster than it should. Owing to the narrowness of the structure and the large amount of traffic that it carries nearly every hour of the day, there is always danger to pedestrians and others. Many people who cross the bridge are apparently dead to the world in general, and they often start to cross the roadway without looking in either direction, and the result is that many accidents are narrowly averted.

One human life is worth more than all the time that would be saved in a generation in speeding across the bridge, and for this reason it is better to use a little caution in advance than to mourn over an accident after it happens. Many autoists whiz over the bridge at a speed that is hair-raising to a careful man, and seem to go on the theory that if a pedestrian gets caught it is his own fault. As there are a great many children cross the bridge every day who are of such tender age that they are not accountable for their actions, it is no more than right that more care should be taken in this matter. It would seem as if this were a matter that the public would not need to be warned of more than once, but it is entirely probable that a few arrests will have to be made before the public gets it thoroly seated on their minds.

A Victim of Misplaced Confidence.

One day recently a young fellow drifted into the sanctum of the Tribune and sung a doleful song about having come to the city to work in one of the local printing offices, only to find upon his arrival that another man occupied the position that he had expected to be in. As it was close to the noon hour and this young man claimed to be without the necessary funds with which to buy a meal, we advanced him the price, to-wit: 25c. Now, we want the public to understand that we do not regret the two bits in the least. In fact, it is probable that we have often spent a quarter that got us no more than did this one, but it seems that this young man, misguided young man, we might say, spent the two-bits for whiskey, thereby becoming intoxicated, and the result was that he was picked up by the police and eventually landed in jail to serve a ten day sentence for disorderly conduct. Is it necessary to say any more on the subject?

ANSWERS TO MISSING WORD CONTEST

First prize of $1.00 goes to Mrs. Kate G. Camp, R. D. No. 6, Grand Rapids, Wis., and the money now awaits her at the Tribune office.

Second prize of a year's subscription to the Tribune goes to Elmer Baldwin of 107 S. 15th Avenue, Grand Rapids.

The missing word was "our" in the Gottschalk & Anderson ad, and was found by a number of persons, altho not so many were succesful as the week before. Possibly the fact that the word was taken out of an ad that had been published one week may have made it more difficult to find, as most of the searchers appeared to be looking in the new ads. The interest that was taken in the matter was very gratifying and would indicate that the ads are being read very carefully by a large number of people. Nobody guessed which was the biggest little store in Grand Rapids, altho there were many answers to this part of the contest. The answer will be found in the space belonging to the merchant this week.

This week there is another missing word somewhere in the advertisements on that page, and to one goes a dollar and to the other a years subscription to the Tribune. If you are interested, write out your answer, seal it in an envelope and mail or deliver it to the Tribune office and you may get one of the prizes. Do not forget to put down the name of the ad, the number of the line in which the word is missing and to sign your name to your communication, giving your address. This last is very important, as a prize could not be awarded, unless we know the name of the person.

Will Debate Taxes.

The Catholic Foresters will hold another of their famous debates on Wednesday evening, the question being one which is before the taxpayers of this state at the present time and is causing much stir all over the state, it being "Resolved That The Present High Etate Tax is Justifiable."

Although the speakers on both sides refuse to discuss their points, it is expected that the Commissions, Boards and other state departments, not to forget the Income Tax and State Aid Highway Law and a few other of the many so called foolish measures taken by the recent legislatures will be torn to pieces and patched up again. It has been rumored that the Governor and some of the commissioners are becoming worried lest some of the very able speakers on this debate expose the extravagant methods used in conducting our state government. Whatever may be the misgivings of these worthy gentlemen, a red hot time is promised by the debaters because they have condescended to say that "They have the dope."

The speakers on the affirmative are: Lawrence Marcoux, Leo Barrett, William Rogers, Leonard Pascavis; and on the negative: Earl Hein Harry Kempfert, Joseph Perdzock, and F. M. Schnabel, all of them very able talkers.

It has been noticed that Speaker Perdzock has been sampling all of the best brands of cigars during the last few days and it is expected that he will have a liberal supply of the best brand for the meeting Wednesday evening. We have been told that he will also furnish something good to eat which sounds very good.

Will Have Opposition.

Marshfield News: Mayor Felker, who has been in the field for a few weeks for re-election, will have opposition, which developed Monday with the announcement that Dr. Knilans will be a candidate for the office.

Dr. Knilans is an alderman of the Fifth ward, now serving his second term, and is one of the successful dentists of the city. He became a resident of this city eleven years ago. He also is prominent in fraternal circles, being the exalted ruler of the Elks lodge and a past master of the Masonic lodge.

Entertainment Course Coming.

The Grand Rapids Young People's Union has completed arrangements with the Mutual Lyceum Bureau of Chicago for an attractive high class enterainment course to be given during the fall and winter months. The course will consist of a variety of attractions which promise to prove educational as well as entertaining, and will be given by well known capable talent.

SYNOPSIS.

Tommy North, returning to his room in Mrs. Moore's boarding house at 2:30 a. m., discovers the body of Capt. John Hanska, another roomer, with a knife wound on his breast. Suspicion rests upon a man giving the name of Lawrence Wade, who had called on Hanska in the evening and had been heard quarreling with Hanska. During the excitement a strange woman who gives her name as Rosalie LeGrange, appears and takes into her own home across the street all of Mrs. Moore's boarders, including Miss Estrilla, an invalid, who was confined to the room she occupied and whose brother was a favorite among the other boarders. Wade is arrested as he is about to leave the country. Mrs. LeGrange, who, while plying her trade as a trance medium, had aided Police Inspector McGee several times, calls at his office to tell what she knows of the crime. While she is there, Constance Hanska, widow of the murdered man, whose existence had been unknown, appears. Mrs. Hanska, says she had left her husband and discloses the fact that Wade represented her and visited Hanska on the night of the murder in an effort to settle their affairs. She admits Wade was in love with her. Wade is held by the coroner's jury for the death of Hanska. Tommy North, who had been held by the police, is released and returns to Mrs. LeGrange's house. He becomes infatuated at once with Betsy Barbara. Driven by the belief that Betsy Barbara loves Estrilla Tommy North gets drunk and is discovered by Betsy Barbara. The next morning Tommy apologizes to Betsy Barbara and at her urging prepares to establish the Thomas W. North Advertising Agency.

"That's easy," said he. "They opened the window. It was raining, wasn't it? Well, the rain came in and stained it."

"I suppose so," said Rosalie. But she made a minute examination. Let us violate for a second the privacy of her mind. "Dear old dope!" it was saying, "he hasn't thought to look into the weather that night. He don't know it had cleared up and stopped raining for good when I came into the house; and I saw them open the windows myself."

"Well," she said aloud, "that's all for the bed. Now let's see the furniture an' his clothes an' everything."

It was half an hour before Rosalie finished her search of the room. She went over it inch by inch, her lips pursed, her hands making quick flutters of disgust over the dirt and disorder. She spoke little, and then as though to herself. Inspector McGee, finally, gave up following her swift movements, mental and physical, and rested himself in a Morris chair. His was a life of grim hard things; these surroundings, depressing even to Rosalie, were to him part of the day's work. And so he fell to watching not the search for evidence but the figure of Rosalie Le Grange. There was something pleasing, and more than pleasing, about this woman here. He remembered how she had appeared to him ten years ago, when she began flashing in and out of his life. He had been sitting in another house of murder, and he had seen her cross the street. He had marked her then as "a peach"—a little too plump for his idea of beauty, but pretty nevertheless. She had brown hair then; and those big gray eyes. The eyes remained as they were, but there was a foam of white across her hair. The face had fallen into a delicate ridge here and there, though massage had taken care of the wrinkles, which showed not as yet. Her figure had broadened a little—yet she still bore it wonderfully. The skin of her long plump hands had begun to gather about the knuckles. And still—she appealed to him as she had never appealed in those first days. He had no great amount of imagination; but what he had soared and took flight. Suppose—then—when they were both young—

It Was a Red Shoe Button.

The flight stopped there; the bird of imagination fluttered to earth, killed by an arrow of memory. This was—had always been—a medium, a professional faker. In their early acquaintance she had duped even him. She was next door to a crook; and he dwelt so close to crooks as to have his tolerations, but also his prejudices. No, she wasn't the kind for a man. But it was a pity. The broad, sturdy police bosom of Martin McGee heaved with a sigh.

The sigh did not escape Rosalie Le Grange; little in her surroundings ever escaped her. She appeared to come out of her thoughtful mood, and her dimples flashed.

"Getting tired?" she asked.

"No," he said. And then suddenly: "Rose, why did you ever start it?"

"Being a medium, you mean?"

"Yes. The word was out of his lips before wonder entered his mind.

"Now, how did you get that—what I was thinking of? You make me wonder if there ain't something in your mediumship."

"Well," said Rosalie. "When you're left an orphan at twelve—there ain't much choice. Professor Vango adopted me—my mother was in his circle. Old fake! But he had mediumship, too; an' he thought, an' I thought, he brought somethin' out of me. Anyhow, I saw things. So I became a medium, like you became a cop—because it happened that way. Sometimes," added Rosalie, drawing all sting from her words by a flash of her dimples, "I think you're awful stupid, Martin McGee, an' sometimes I think you're a wonder. It's generally according to whether or no you agree with me. As you mostly do, I generally call you a wonder. An' you've got get-there besides. Slow, but you do get there."

This bit of conversation fulfilled Rosalie's purpose. It turned the subject from herself to Inspector McGee's self; and she knew from a life of experience that no man lives who can resist that lure.

"How do you feel about me today?" he asked with heavy male coquetry.

"I haven't made up my mind today," she said, "but it's veerin' toward the stupid." She crossed the room and fumbled with the catch of the south window. He rose heavily to help her.

"No, thank you!" she said. "No, thank you. I want to look over this fire escape. I'm that old I can't go up modest-like. It's enough to have the stenographers rubberin' from these windows, without you."

However, she managed with surpassing lightness the step from the window to the iron stairway, with astonishing grace the ascent. She threaded it to its top, viewing it all in a general way. Then she stopped, making a picture of herself as she balanced on the landing, and pulled out a wire hairpin. This universal implement of the sex she twisted to suit her purpose, and began a slow descent, picking at the interstices of the iron.

So she worked downward nearly one flight before she came to a cake of dirt in a corner of the iron steps. She brushed it away and discovered a little irregularity in the metal. She picked at this with her twisted hairpin. It proved to be a loop of steel, somewhat spotted, but still bright. She hooked the pin into the loop, and pulled. Something gave way. Out of a very small hollow in the iron step, which seemed like a bubble left in the process of casting, came a little hard ball. She rubbed it with her hands, and polished it with her handkerchief.

It was a red shoe button.

Rosalie fingered it, and glanced upward, musing. Above, the iron stairway ran straight to the windows of the lumber room. And that was the only window from which it could have fallen in such fashion as to strike the fire escape. She knew from Mrs. Moore that this room had been used for storage during all of the last year. If a previous tenant dropped it, the lacquer would be gone or tarnished by now. The other windows on the fourth floor were cut off from view of the fire escape by an irregularity of the wall. From those windows, one could scarcely have thrown the button and hit that spot on the fire escape—"let alone droppin' it," thought Rosalie.

Rosalie wrapped the button in her handkerchief and continued her search. Nothing heavier than straws and scraps of paper.

"Well, you never can tell," she said to herself as she straightened up on the landing before Captain Hanska's window; "let's see—who in my house ever wears—"

She stopped all motion here; and since there was no need for concealment, her face showed the shock which she felt. Her eyes widened; her jaw dropped.

"Um-hum!" she buzzed with the tone of one who gathers the straws of suspicion into a sheaf of fact. "Um-hum!"

And just then the voice of Inspector McGee boomed from within.

"Pretty near through?" he asked.

"Much as I want," replied Rosalie, voice and face falling at once into indifference. "Is there a place to wash in this house? Water ain't turned off yet? All right."

When, ten minutes later, she returned from the lavatory, marvelously freshened in appearance, the inspector awaited her in the lower hall.

"I may be wanting to come again," she said. "Will you let the cops know?"

"Well, how do I stack today?" asked Martin McGee, "smart or stupid?"

"Kind of between," jabbed Rosalie, "but edgin' toward stupid still." She smiled again over her shoulder; a dimple played and then another; a lock of hair fell from its fastening over her cheek.

And suddenly something happened; something which Martin McGee, blushing over it later in silence and secrecy, could not himself account for. With the motion of a dancing bear, so awkward was it and yet so quick, he had caught her in his arms and kissed her heavily on the face.

Rosalie did not seem to struggle; yet somehow, without haste, without disarranging herself in one little item, she was free of him. The surge in Martin McGee receded as rapidly as it had risen. He stood blank, his color thickening.

"Martin McGee," said Rosalie Le Grange, "you jest cut that out!"

CHAPTER IX.

Moving the Pawns.

At breakfast next morning, Rosalie opened her game—opened it like a master of human chessmen, with a trifling move or two of the pawns.

"Don't any of you people be astonished," she said, "if your clothes look strange and orderly when you get home tonight. This is my day for cleaning closets. I announce now that if I find anything isn't hung where it ought to be, I'm going to set it right."

When they were gone, Rosalie Le Grange, refusing assistance from Mrs.

"What Do Your Spirits Say to You?"

Moore, put on dust-cap and long apron and made good her word. But she did more than clean. From Miss Harding's apartment on the ground floor to Miss Estrilla's on the top, she examined minutely every garment and every pair of shoes. When she had finished, when she stood in her own room dressing for the street, she looked very serious. Before she put away her house-dress, she took from its pocket the red shoe button. She inspected it again, and locked it away in the deepest compartment of her jewel case.

Rosalie walked briskly to a bookstore in the heart of the foreign district, held short consultation with the clerk, journeyed another block, and stood at length before a sign lettered in many tongues. She hesitated and began talking to herself.

"You can't teach an old dog new tricks," she remarked.

"But sometimes you can brush up the old tricks he used to know," she added. "It'll take time—well, anyway, I'm here!" and she entered.

When she emerged, it lacked but half an hour for lunch time. At the table, she made subtle inquiry about the plans of her boarders for the day. Mr. North, already busy with his agency, had not come home to lunch at all. Betsy-Barbara had an engagement to help him select furniture. Constance must spend the afternoon with her lawyers. Professor Noll intended to read a paper at the Health Food conference. Miss Harding and Miss Jones never came home between breakfast and dinner time.

"Now's my chance—while the house is empty an' my nerve's good," she said to herself as the boarders departed.

Forthwith, Rosalie moved a major piece. She mounted the stairs toward Miss Estrilla's room. She was behaving strangely. Her eyes looked far away. Her manner seemed remote to the things of this world. As she knocked and entered, she passed her hand over her eyes, gave a little convulsive jerk, dropped her hand to her side, and shook herself.

Miss Estrilla lay back among the cushions in half-light. She seemed to catch the strange new manner of Rosalie.

"What's the matter?" she asked.

Rosalie did not answer at once. She gave a little stagger, sank down in a chair, and began to murmur inarticulate syllables in a low and rather husky voice.

"What has happened?" asked Miss Estrilla again; and she spoke in real alarm.

Rosalie sat upright as with great effort. Once or twice her hands clasped and unclasped.

"Give me that glass of water," she said in a half-whisper. She drank; she wet her fingers and dabbed her temples.

"Are you ill? Shall I send for some one?" repeated Miss Estrilla.

"I'm better now," replied Rosalie in a firm but rather sleepy voice. "It's cruel to frighten you. But listen. I'm in trouble in a way"—at this, Miss Estrilla settled back as though relieved, somehow—"an' I've just got to ask for your help. Now please don't be scared. It's really nothin'—only—well, I've got to tell about it, I guess." All the weariness of the world was in that last phrase. "I git took this way sometimes. There's nothin' dreadful about it when folks understand. Don't call anybody, please don't. Jest stay where you are. In a minute, I'll be goin' out of myself—unconscious, you know. I'll talk, probably. I may thrash around a little. By an' by, I'll stop talkin' an' be perfectly quiet—" Here Rosalie shuddered three or four times again, impersonated an effort of the will, and went on: "Don't do anything to me while I'm talkin'. But after I'm done, an' lay quiet, wait five minutes. Then if I don't come to, sprinkle water in my face, shake me—anything an'—don't—tell—anybody—" These last words died away in a crooning undertone. Rosalie sank deeper into her chair. Her eyes fixed on the distance. Gradually, her lids fell. So she rested for some time, immobile. Miss Estrilla, sitting up on her couch, watched Rosalie intently. Now and then, Rosalie noted, her breathing came in irregular little catches. From the cover of her long eyelashes, best instrument of her trade, Rosalie stole a glance which took in this constrained attitude. She let her lids droop to a full close.

"Ugh—oh—ugh!" went Rosalie's voice finally; and at the deep tone, so unlike Rosalie's accustomed silvern accents, Miss Estrilla started.

"Doctor Carver"—it was a deep male voice which proceeded from Rosalie's entranced lips; this male voice of her had been the envy of her old contemporaries—"a—ah! Doctor Carver. I come to speak of a young man. I see him near this place. I see a struggle about him. I see a glass of liquor on one side of him and a woman's hand on the other. He is drawing toward the woman's hands. I see her more clearly now. She has golden hair. I see him working far into the night. His hand is writing—ugh—" This was a kind of shuddering groan. "I am going!" Another silence. Then a light flute-like voice—the accustomed tone of Laughing-Eyes, Rosalie's famous child control, and the most artistic thing she did.

"Flowers for a pretty lady!" came the voice of Laughing-Eyes. "Pretty lady is sick. Pretty lady is crying. It's bright here. And the spirits talk to me. One, two, three spirits talk to Laughing-Eyes. One of them wants the pretty lady—oh, he's gone! He is weak. I am weak—good-by—pretty—" Rosalie's lips closed, and she settled down as though into deeper sleep. She waited through a space which seemed eternity. Presently she heard a rustling from the bed. Miss Estrilla had moved. Rosalie braced herself within for the shock of cold water. But Miss Estrilla only shook her. Rosalie made a sleepy motion and became still. Miss Estrilla shook her again, and called into her ear.

"Madame Le Grange—wake up!"

This time, Rosalie permitted her eyes to open. She stared a moment as at things remote, fetched another shudder, sat bolt upright. Her first expression was bewildered; her second startled. There followed every appearance of embarrassment and chagrin.

"Oh, what has happened?" she said.

"Don't you know?" asked Miss Estrilla, regarding her narrowly.

"I remember coming in here," said Rosalie, "an' I remember telling you that I might go out—fall asleep." She arose at this and began nervously to pace the room.

"I've got to apologize," she went on, "I am—well, the last time I was took this way, I went to my own room. When I came to, it was dark—the servants thought I'd gone away an' forgot to come home to dinner. I made up my mind I wouldn't let it happen again like that—an' you were the only person in the house. Was I out—asleep—long?"

"About six or seven minutes, I think," said Miss Estrilla. Suddenly she covered her eyes with their green shade.

"What does it mean, all this?" she asked.

"Poor dear, I believe I must have bothered you with my talking—if I did talk." She approached the bed, and sat down.

"Now I'm goin' to tell you all about it," pursued Rosalie; "I must, of course. It ain't right not to explain, now I've made this scene. But you'll be the only livin' soul around the house that knows a thing, an' you'll understand what I mean when I'm through. Comin' right out with it, I've been a medium—a spirit medium—all my life. You know what that is, don't you?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Didn't know but you mightn't. Some folks don't, an' some hold a low opinion of 'em. I do myself." Rosalie paused. "That was why I cut it out, maybe—that and the feelin' that my powers was goin'. Well, one day comes a legacy—money I'd never counted on or expected. An' that happened jest when it seemed like my power had grown weak an' I had to quit or be a fake—because when people come an' pay you two dollars you have to deliver answers or you'll git no more custom. So I jest determined to drop it all an' go to keepin' boarders with my money."

Rosalie made the proper dramatic pause here, and let her voice fall.

"You can't do a thing all your life, though, an' stop it right away. I hadn't counted on that. I never could control my trances exactly. They had a way of comin' when they wanted to. You can hold it off for a while, an' then—it's like holdin' off sleep. Twice before this week it's happened—I've told you what I did the second time, an' how it scared me. An' just now, standin' in the hall, I felt it comin' on—strong. You know the rest. An' I hope you'll excuse me—an' you won't say a thing, will you?" Rosalie's voice held all the pleading in the world.

Miss Estrilla, expressionless behind her green shade, spoke in an even and unemotional voice.

"And what do your spirits say to you?"

"To me?" replied Rosalie; "goodness, I don't know. I wish I did. I have to find afterwards from other people what I said or did. Well, I'm as sorry as can be that I bothered you, an' won't do it again, if I can help it. Did I talk much?"

"Not a great deal. Something about a young man and a young woman."

"Anybody in the house? Sometimes—they tell me—my spirits talk about folks a thousand miles away an' sometimes about folks that are right here."

Miss Estrilla seemed to be considering this. When she spoke, her voice was still even and perfectly controlled; but she did not answer the question.

"You have been very kind," she said, "and I don't see why you should tell any one else. You may come here whenever you feel that way. It would be a pleasure to return your kindness."

Rosalie sighed as in relief.

"My! That's good. I didn't want to ask—it's a lot to ask of anybody—but now you've offered, I'll take it. I've been thinkin' lately it would be a good thing to let go of myself when I feel it comin', an' get it off my system. Was that the bell? Excuse me—I ain't sure that lazy Molly will answer it.—An' thank you, my dear."

The bell was only a peddler. When Rosalie had disposed of him, she consulted her watch. Much remained of the afternoon.

"Good time to git in an hour's session with that darned phonograph," she said; and she took refuge in her own big clothes-closet—which, experiment had shown, was sound-proof.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

HOW TO PLACE THE MIRROR

One Should Be Hung in a Dark Hall Where It Will Serve a Triple Purpose.

Always place a mirror in a dark hall. If it can be so placed that it reflects the opening into the living or drawingroom, it will serve a triple purpose—it will be a convenience to the guests and members of the family when they are starting out, it will increase the light and it will make the hall seem bigger.

In a living room place several mirrors, if the room is dark. Place them in rather unexpected places. A long narrow mirror can be hung lengthwise, perhaps in a corner beside a door. Another mirror can be placed on a wall opposite a window and so will reflect the garden or trees or sea or street and give the room apparently another window. Another mirror can be placed at such an angle that it will not necessarily reflect the people sitting about the fire. The object of living room mirrors is not to give reflections of the persons in the room, and such reflections are sometimes annoying.

In bedrooms and dressing rooms mirrors cannot be too many. A pier glass is convenient, and especially desirable because it can be placed across a corner of the room or in some other position which makes it of decorative value. But far more practical in a small room—and cheaper, too—is the mirror fastened to the door. It should be held in place by the wooden panel-ing.

Held to Their Carriage.

A man seated in his own private carriage placed upon a track at the end of a railway train would probably be considered a bit of a crank nowadays. Yet it was quite a common occurrence within the memory of many people still living. The late duke of Portland always traveled in that way between Welbeck and London. And in Notes and Queries the Rev. Sir David Hunter-Blair tells a story of a gentleman he knew in his youth who was wont to go from London to Brighton in the same fashion. Once the truck at the end of the train got disconnected in a tunnel, leaving the exclusive passenger seated stationary in his carriage—also in darkness and peril.

WILSON ANALYZES SELF TO PRESS MEN

President Tells What Office Means to Him.

SIZE OF TASK TREMENDOUS

Chief Executive Finds Pose of Dignity Irksome and Declares When Term Is Over He Will Visit Washington on Sightseeing Tour.

Washington, March 23.—Woodrow Wilson unbosomed himself to the members of the National Press club of Washington Friday, telling them in a frank, conversational way how he felt as president of the United States; how difficult it was for him to imagine himself as the chief executive with the formal amenities of the position, and how he had struggled to be as free as the ordinary individual without the restraints of his office.

It was an intimate picture of Woodrow Wilson—the man—drawn by himself, on the occasion of the "housewarming" at the Press club's new quarters.

The president did not intend to have his remarks reported, but later, at the request of the club, the speech was made public.

Wilson, as He Sees Himself.

"I was just thinking of my sense of confusion of identity sometimes when I read articles about myself," the president said. "I have never read an article about myself in which I recognized myself, and I have come to have the impression that I must be some kind of a fraud, because I think a great many of these articles are written in absolute good faith.

"I tremble to think of the variety and falseness in the impressions I make—and it is being borne in on me so that it may change my very disposition—that I am a cold and removed person who has a thinking machine inside which he adjusts to the circumstances—which he does not allow to be moved by any winds of affection or emotion of any kind—but turns like a cold searchlight on anything that is presented to his attention and makes it work.

Feels Responsibility Keenly.

"I am not aware of having any detachable apparatus inside of me. On the contrary, if I were to interpret myself, I would say that my constant embarrassment is to retain the emotions that are inside of me.

"You may not believe it, but I sometimes feel like a fire from a far from extinct volcano, and if the lava does not seem to spill over it is because you are not high enough to see into the basin and see the caldron boil. Because, truly, gentlemen, in the position which I occupy there is a sort of—I do not know how else to express it than to say—passionate sense of being connected with my fellow men in a peculiar relationship of responsibility of office, but God knows there are enough things in this world that need to be corrected.

Fear He'll Disappoint People.

"I have mixed first and last with all sorts and conditions of men—there are mighty few kinds of men that have to be described to me, and there are mighty few kinds of experiences that have to be described to me—and when I think of the number of men who are looking to me as the representative of a party, with the hope for all varieties of salvation from the things they are struggling in the midst of, it makes me tremble.

"It makes me tremble not only with a sense of my own inadequacy and weakness, but as if I were shaken by the very things that are shaking them, and if I seem circumspect it is because I am so diligently trying not to make any colossal blunders.

"If you just calculated the number of blunders a fellow can make in 24 hours if he is not careful and if he does not listen more than he talks, you would see something of the feeling that I have.

Always Eager to Get Advice.

"I was amused the other day at a remark that Senator Newlands made. I had read him the trust message that I was to deliver to congress some ten days before I delivered it, and I never stop 'doctoring' things of that kind until the day I have to deliver them.

"When he heard it read to congress he said: 'I think it was better than it was when you read it to me.' I said: 'Senator, there is one thing which I do not think you understand. I not only use all the brains I have, but all I can borrow, and I have borrowed a lot since I read it to you first.'

"That, I dare say, is what gives the impression of circumspectness. I am listening; I am diligently trying to collect all the brains that are borrowable in order that I may not make more blunders than it is inevitable that a man should make who has great limitations of knowledge and capacity. And the emotion of the thing is so great that I suppose I must be some kind of a mask to conceal it.

Often Feels He's Masquerading.

"I really feel sometimes as if I were masquerading when I catch a picture of myself in some printed description.

"In between things that I have to do as a public officer I never think of myself as the president of the United States, because I never have had any sense of being identified with that office.

"I feel like a person appointed for a certain length of time to administer that office, and I feel just as much outside of it at this moment as I did before I was elected to it. I feel just as much outside of it as I still feel outside of the government of the United States.

"No man could imagine himself the government of the United States; but he could understand that some part of his fellow citizens had told him to go and run a certain part of it the best he knew how.

"That would not make him the government itself or the thing itself. It would just make him responsible for running it the best he knew how.

Office So Great; Man So Small.

"The machine is so much greater than himself, the office is so much greater than he; the office is so much greater than he can ever be, and the most he can do is to look grave enough and self-possessed enough to seem to fill it.

"I can hardly refrain every now and again from tipping the public the wink, as much as to say, 'It is only me that is inside this thing. I know that I will have to get out presently. I know that then I will look just my own proper size, and that for the time being the proportions are somewhat refracted and misrepresented to the eye by the large thing I am inside of, from which I am tipping you this wink.'

"For example, take matters of this sort. I will not say whether it is wise or unwise; simple or grave, but certain precedents have been established that in certain companies the president must leave the room first and people must give way to him. They must not sit down if he is standing up.

Finds Customs Embarrassing.

"It is a very uncomfortable thing to have to think of all the other people every time I get up and sit down, and all that sort of thing. So when I get guests in my own house and the public is shut out, I adjourn being president and take leave to be a gentleman. If they draw back and insist upon my doing something first I firmly decline.

"There are blessed intervals when I forget by one means or another that I am president of the United States. One means by which I forget is to get a rattling good detective story, get after some imaginary offender, and chase him all over—preferably any continent but this—because the various parts of this continent are becoming painfully suggestive to me.

"The postoffices and many other things which stir reminiscences have 'sickled them o'er with a pale cast of thought.' There are postoffices to which I wouldn't think of mailing a letter, which I can't think of without trembling with the knowledge of the heartburnings of the struggle there was in connection with getting somebody installed as postmaster.

Knows Little of Capital Sights.

"Now, if I were free, I would come not infrequently up to these rooms. You know I never was in Washington but a very few hours until I came last year and I never expect to see the inside of the public buildings in Washington until my term is over.

"The minute I turn up anywhere, I am personally conducted to beat the band. The curator, and the assistant curators, and every other blooming official turns up, and they show me so much attention that I don't see the building. I would have to say, 'Stand aside and let me see what you are showing me.'

"Some day, after I am through with this office, I am going to come back to Washington and see it. In the meantime, I am in the same category as the National museum, the monument, the Smithsonian institution, or the Congressional library, and everything that comes down here has to be shown the president.

"If I only knew an exhibition appearance to assume—apparently other appearances that do not show what is going on inside—I would like to have it pointed out, so that I could practise it before the looking glass and see if I could not look like the monument.

"Being regarded as a national exhibit, it would be much simpler than being shaken hands with by the whole United States. And yet, even that is interesting to me, simply because I like human beings.

"It is a pretty poor crowd that does not interest you. I think they would have to be all members of that class that devotes itself to 'expense regardless of pleasure' in order to be entirely uninteresting. These look so much alike—spend their time trying to look so much alike—and so relieve themselves of all responsibility of thought—that they are very monotonous indeed to look at! whereas a crowd picked up off the street is just a jolly lot—a job lot of real human beings, pulsating with life, with all kinds of passions and desires.

Plain Citizen, His Ambition.

"It would be a great pleasure if, unserved and unattended, I could be knocked around as I have been accustomed to be knocked around all my life; if I could resort to any delightful quarter, to any place in Washington that I chose. I have sometimes thought of going to some costumer—some theatrical costumer—and buying an assortment of beards, rouge, coloring, and all the known means of disguising myself, if it were not against the law. You see, I have a scruple as president against breaking the law and disguising one's self is against the law.

"But if I could disguise myself and not get caught I would go out, be a free American citizen once more, and have a jolly time. I might then meet some of you gentlemen and actually tell you what I really thought."

TORREON CAPTURED

VILLA'S REBELS KILL 1,500 HUERTA SOLDIERS IN TERRIFIC BATTLE.

CITY IS NOW IN FLAMES

Victors Apply Torch to Captured Town to Wipe Out Cholera—Defeated Troops Throw Away Arms to Avoid Being Shot.

El Verjel, Durango, March 26.—Torreon fell at five o'clock on Tuesday. General Villa won a complete and sweeping victory. The former bandit and refugee is now the absolute master of northern Mexico. There are only meager federal forces to resist his occupation of Monterey and Saltillo and Tampico on the east and Mazatlan on the west.

With the Huerta army under Velasco scattered and broken beyond repair at Torreon, the road to Mexico City lies open to Villa. Villa is being cheered by his men and his generals as the great military genius in Mexico.

General Velasco knew he was defeated when his forces were smashed and driven out of Gomez Palacio. He had realized that there was the place whose natural advantages gave him his best chance of stopping the advance of Villa with his 12,000 men against Velasco's 9,000. The artillery equipment of the opposing forces were about equal. Fleeing from Gomez Palacio in utter route, Velasco's men got no respite. The rebels pursued relentlessly. The federals' only hope was to hold the Nazas river against Villa with their batteries there. But their own guns were turned against them from the north, covering the advance of the forces of Villa and Benavides from the northeast, and when the Nazas batteries were silenced Torreon was doomed.

With 1,500 federals estimated to have been slain in the terrific fighting at Gomez Palacio, which ended in the rout of General Velasco's forces, Villa mercilessly pursued the beaten forces and then, with Torreon surrounded, Villa and General Benevides, with his famous Zaragosa brigade, led an onslaught from the east and northeast.

The fierce hand-to-hand fighting in the streets, the flaming of buildings put to the torch and the devastation generally that fell on Gomez Palacio also were visited on Torreon.

In the fierce fighting of the last 48 hours hundreds of federal troops broke from their ranks and deserted to Villa's army. They were held in the trenches under the onrush of the constitutionalists only by the actions of their officers, who shot into the backs of men who tried to flee. The loss of life on the federal side is believed to have been the heaviest of the present revolution, for Velasco's army fought in massed formations against a terrible artillery bombardment.

Corpses of cholera victims were strewn in all the federal trenches.

Fearful of an outbreak of the deadly disease in his own ranks, the conqueror issued orders for the burning of all barracks and hundreds of other buildings that might be suspected of having harbored the cholera stricken, so that Torreon is in conflagration.

Whetted by the crushing blow administered to Velasco's army at Gomez Palacio, nothing could stay the advance of Villa's men. The way led for four miles through apparently impassable territory. The gun carriages went into the mud to their hubs; barbed wire barricades were every few hundred feet of the way, quagmires and canals had to be crossed and all the time a pounding fire was in their faces from the batteries on the Nazas river.

Benevides added terror by setting fire to all buildings along his approach to the plaza and issuing orders to his men to shoot down all found with arms. Velasco's men heard the shouted orders and began flinging away their weapons and scurrying up the streets. The federals utterly abandoned their wounded in the fields of Gomez Palacio and Torreon.

SLAVERY OF COLONIAL DAYS

More Than Half a Million Whites Were Held in Bondage During That Period.

Could we draw the curtain which conceals the life of prehistoric people, we should see that the servant problem is as old as the human race. Indeed, if it were possible for extremes to meet, cave-dwellers and denizens of twentieth century sky-scrapers would doubtless converse sympathetically on this never-ending problem. Its existence is due to the universal desire of man to use the strength of others for his own profit and pleasure—an unchangeable trait of human nature.

During the colonial period of our history, service was performed in the main by two classes—the negro slave and the indentured white servant, writes Prof. Marcus W. Jernegan in Harper's Magazine. The white servant, a semi-slave, was more important in the seventh century than even the negro slave, in respect to both numbers and economic significance. Perhaps the most pressing of the early needs of the colonists was for a certain and adequate supply of labor. It was the white servants who supplied this demand and made possible a rapid economic development, particularly of the middle and southern colonies. In 1683 there were 12,000 of these semi-slaves in Virginia, composing about one-sixth of the population, while nearly two-thirds of the immigrants to Pennsylvania during the eighteenth century were white servants. Every other colony made greater or less use of them, and it is likely that more than half a million persons were of this class during the colonial period.

Woman's Observation.

A woman's powers of observation are fearfully and wonderfully made. She can be introduced to a strange gentleman, and after two minutes of casual conversation she can tell you his habitual state of temper, whether his wife affects domesticity or clubs, and whether or not he is happy in his home and living within his income. She can go to a social function where there are 20 women she never saw before, and come back with an inventory of what each one wore, how much it cost, whether any part of the costume was "made over," what changes it needed to make it really becoming, and whether the wearer could afford it.

After she has finished imparting this information she can write down from memory, without making more than three mistakes in each, half a dozen new recipes for onion preserves and asparagus shortcake that she picked up at the same gathering.

SYNOPSIS.

Tommy North, returning to his room in Mrs. Moore's boarding house at 2:30 a. m., discovers the body of Capt. John Hanska, another roomer, with a knife wound on his breast. Suspicion rests upon a man giving the name of Lawrence Wade, who had called on Hanska in the evening and had been heard quarreling with Hanska. During the excitement a strange woman across the street all of Mrs. Moore's boarders, including Miss Estrilla, an invalid, who was confined to the room she occupied and whose brother was a favorite among the other boarders. Wade is arrested as he is about to leave the country. Mrs. LeGrange, who, while plying her trade as a trance medium, had aided Police Inspector Martin McGee several times, calls at his office to tell what she knows of the crime. While she is there, Constance Hanska, widow of the murdered man, whose existence had been unknown, appears. Mrs. Hanska says she had left her husband and discloses the fact that Wade represented her and visited Hanska on the night of the murder in an effort to settle their affairs. She admits Wade was in love with her. Wade is held by the coroner's jury for the death of Hanska. Tommy North, who had been held by the police, is released and returns to Mrs. LeGrange's house. He becomes infatuated at once with Betsy Barbara. Driven by the belief that Betsy Barbara loves Estrilla Tommy North gets drunk and is discovered by Betsy Barbara. The next morning Tommy apologizes to Betsy Barbara and at her urging prepares to establish the Thomas W. North Advertising Agency.

"That's easy," said he. "They opened the window. It was raining, wasn't it? Well, the rain came in and stained it."

"I suppose so," said Rosalie. But she made a minute examination. Let us violate for a second the privacy of her mind. "Dear old dope!" it was saying, "he hasn't thought to look into the weather that night. He don't know it had cleared up and stopped raining for good when I came into the house; and I saw them open the windows myself."

"Well," she said aloud, "that's all for the bed. Now let's see the furniture an' his clothes an' everything."

It was half an hour before Rosalie finished her search of the room. She went over it inch by inch, her lips pursed, her hands making quick flutters of disgust over the dirt and disorder. She spoke little, and then as though to herself. Inspector McGee, finally, gave up following her swift movements, mental and physical, and rested himself in a Morris chair. His was a life of grim hard things; these surroundings, depressing even to Rosalie, were to him part of the day's work. And so he fell to watching not the search for evidence but the figure of Rosalie Le Grange. There was something pleasing, and more than pleasing, about this woman here. He remembered how she had appeared to him ten years ago, when she began flashing in and out of his life. He had been sitting in another house of murder, and he had seen her cross the street. He had marked her then as "a peach"—a little too plump for his idea of beauty, but pretty nevertheless. She had brown hair then; and those big gray eyes. The eyes remained as they were, but there was a foam of white across her hair. The face had fallen into a delicate ridge here and there, though massage had taken care of the wrinkles, which showed not as yet. Her figure had broadened a little—yet she still bore it wonderfully. The skin of her long plump hands had begun to gather about the knuckles. And still—she appealed to him as she had never appealed in those first days. He had no great amount of imagination; but what he had soared and took flight. Suppose—then—when they were both young—

It Was a Red Shoe Button.

The flight stopped there; the bird of imagination fluttered to earth, killed by an arrow of memory. This was—had always been—a medium, a professional faker. In their early acquaintance she had duped even him. She was next door to a crook; and he dwelt so close to crooks as to have his tolerations, but also his prejudices. No, she wasn't the kind for a man. But it was a pity. The broad, sturdy police bosom of Martin McGee heaved with a sigh.

The sigh did not escape Rosalie Le Grange; little in her surroundings ever escaped her. She appeared to come out of her thoughtful mood, and her dimples flashed.

"Getting tired?" she asked.

"No," he said. And then suddenly: "Rose, why did you ever start it?"

"Being a medium, you mean?"

"Yes. The word was out of his lips before wonder entered his mind.

"Now, how did you get that—what I was thinking of? You make me wonder if there ain't something in your mediumship."

"Well," said Rosalie. "When you're left an orphan at twelve—there ain't much choice. Professor Vango adopted me—my mother was in his circle. Old fake! But he had mediumship, too; an' he thought, an' I thought, he brought somethin' out of me. Anyhow, I saw things. So I became a medium, like you became a cop—because it happened that way. Sometimes," added Rosalie, drawing all sting from her words by a flash of her dimples, "I think you're awful stupid, Martin McGee, an' sometimes I think you're a wonder. It's generally according to whether or no you agree with me. As you mostly do, I generally call you a wonder. An' you've got get-there besides. Slow, but you do get there."

This bit of conversation fulfilled Rosalie's purpose. It turned the subject from herself to Inspector McGee's self; and she knew from a life of experience that no man lives who can resist that lure.

"How do you feel about me today?" he asked with heavy male coquetry.

"I haven't made up my mind today," she said, "but it's veerin' toward the stupid." She crossed the room and fumbled with the catch of the south window. He rose heavily to help her.

"No, thank you!" she said. "No, thank you. I want to look over this fire escape. I'm that old I can't go up modest-like. It's enough to have the stenographers rubberin' from these windows, without you."

However, she managed with surpassing lightness the step from the window to the iron stairway, with astonishing grace the ascent. She threaded it to its top, viewing it all in a general way. Then she stopped, making a picture of herself as she balanced on the landing, and pulled out a wire hairpin. This universal implement of the sex she twisted to suit her purpose, and began a slow descent, picking at the interstices of the iron.

So she worked downward nearly one flight before she came to a cake of dirt in a corner of the iron steps. She brushed it away and discovered a little irregularity in the metal. She picked at this with her twisted hairpin. It proved to be a loop of steel, somewhat spotted, but still bright. She hooked the pin into the loop, and pulled. Something gave way. Out of a very small hollow in the iron step, which seemed like a bubble left in the process of casting, came a little hard ball. She rubbed it with her hands, and polished it with her handkerchief.

It was a red shoe button.

Rosalie fingered it, and glanced upward, musing. Above, the iron stairway ran straight to the windows of the lumber room. And that was the only window from which it could have fallen in such fashion as to strike the fire escape. She knew from Mrs. Moore that this room had been used for storage during all of the last year. If a previous tenant dropped it, the lacquer would be gone or tarnished by now. The other windows on the fourth floor were cut off from view of the fire escape by an irregularity of the wall. From those windows, one could scarcely have thrown the button and hit that spot on the fire escape—"let alone droppin' it," thought Rosalie.

Rosalie wrapped the button in her handkerchief and continued her search. Nothing heavier than straws and scraps of paper.

"Well, you never can tell," she said to herself as she straightened up on the landing before Captain Hanska's window; "let's see—who in my house ever wears—"

She stopped all motion here; and since there was no need for concealment, her face showed the shock which she felt. Her eyes widened; her jaw dropped.

"Um-hum!" she buzzed with the tone of one who gathers the straws of suspicion into a sheaf of fact. "Um-hum!"

And just then the voice of Inspector McGee boomed from within.

"Pretty near through?" he asked.

"Much as I want," replied Rosalie, voice and face falling at once into indifference. "Is there a place to wash in this house? Water ain't turned off yet? All right."

When, ten minutes later, she returned from the lavatory, marvelously freshened in appearance, the inspector awaited her in the lower hall.

"I may be wanting to come again," she said. "Will you let the cops know?"

"Well, how do I stack today?" asked Martin McGee, "smart or stupid?"

"Kind of between," jabbed Rosalie, "but edgin' toward stupid still." She smiled again over her shoulder; a dimple played and then another; a lock of hair fell from its fastening over her cheek.

And suddenly something happened; something which Martin McGee, blushing over it later in silence and secrecy, could not himself account for. With the motion of a dancing bear, so awkward was it and yet so quick, he had caught her in his arms and kissed her heavily on the face.

Rosalie did not seem to struggle; yet somehow, without haste, without disarranging herself in one little item, she was free of him. The surge in Martin McGee receded as rapidly as it had risen. He stood blank, his color thickening.

"Martin McGee," said Rosalie Le Grange, "you jest cut that out!"

CHAPTER IX.

Moving the Pawns.

At breakfast next morning, Rosalie opened her game—opened it like a master of human chessmen, with a trifling move or two of the pawns.

"Don't any of you people be astonished," she said, "if your clothes look strange and orderly when you get home tonight. This is my day for cleaning closets. I announce now that if I find anything isn't hung where it ought to be, I'm going to set it right."

When they were gone, Rosalie Le Grange, refusing assistance from Mrs.

"What Do Your Spirits Say to You?"

Moore, put on dust-cap and long apron and made good her word. But she did more than clean. From Miss Harding's apartment on the ground floor to Miss Estrilla's on the top, she examined minutely every garment and every pair of shoes. When she had finished, when she stood in her own room dressing for the street, she looked very serious. Before she put away her house-dress, she took from its pocket the red shoe button. She inspected it again, and locked it away in the deepest compartment of her jewel case.

Rosalie walked briskly to a bookstore in the heart of the foreign district, held short consultation with the clerk, journeyed another block, and stood at length before a sign lettered in many tongues. She hesitated and began talking to herself.

"You can't teach an old dog new tricks," she remarked.

"But sometimes you can brush up the old tricks he used to know," she added. "It'll take time—well, anyway, I'm here!" and she entered.

When she emerged, it lacked but half an hour for lunch time. At the table, she made subtle inquiry about the plans of her boarders for the day. Mr. North, already busy with his agency, had not come home to lunch at all. Betsy-Barbara had an engagement to help him select furniture. Constance must spend the afternoon with her lawyers. Professor Noll intended to read a paper at the Health Food conference. Miss Harding and Miss Jones never came home between breakfast and dinner time.

"Now's my chance—while the house is empty an' my nerve's good," she said to herself as the boarders departed.

Forthwith, Rosalie moved a major piece. She mounted the stairs toward Miss Estrilla's room. She was behaving strangely. Her eyes looked far away. Her manner seemed remote to the things of this world. As she knocked and entered, she passed her hand over her eyes, gave a little convulsive jerk, dropped her hand to her side, and shook herself.

Miss Estrilla lay back among the cushions in half-light. She seemed to catch the strange new manner of Rosalie.

"What's the matter?" she asked.

Rosalie did not answer at once. She gave a little stagger, sank down in a chair, and began to murmur inarticulate syllables in a low and rather husky voice.

"What has happened?" asked Miss Estrilla again; and she spoke in real alarm.

Rosalie sat upright as with great effort. Once or twice her hands clasped and unclasped.

"Give me that glass of water," she said in a half-whisper. She drank; she wet her fingers and dabbed her temples.

"Are you ill? Shall I send for some one?" repeated Miss Estrilla.

"I'm better now," replied Rosalie in a firm but rather sleepy voice. "It's cruel to frighten you. But listen. I'm in trouble in a way"—at this, Miss Estrilla settled back as though relieved, somehow—"an' I've just got to ask for your help. Now please, don't be scared. It's really nothin'—only—well, I've got to tell about it, I guess." All the weariness of the world was in that last phrase. "I git took this way sometimes. There's nothin' dreadful about it when folks understand. Don't call anybody, please don't. Jest stay where you are. In a minute, I'll be goin' out of myself—unconscious, you know. I'll talk, probably. I may thrash around a little. By an' by, I'll stop talkin' an' be perfectly quiet—" Here Rosalie shuddered three or four times again, impersonated an effort of the will, and went on: "Don't do anything to me while I'm talkin'. But after I'm done an' lay quiet, wait five minutes. Then if I don't come to, sprinkle water in my face, shake me—anything an'—don't—tell—anybody—" These last words died away in a crooning undertone. Rosalie sank deeper into her chair. Her eyes fixed on the distance. Gradually, her lids fell. So she rested for some time, immobile. Miss Estrilla, sitting up on her couch, watched Rosalie intently. Now and then, Rosalie noted, her breathing came in irregular little catches. From the cover of her long eyelashes, best instrument of her trade, Rosalie stole a glance which took in this constrained attitude. She let her lids droop to a full close.

"Ugh—oh—ugh!" went Rosalie's voice finally; and at the deep tone, so unlike Rosalie's accustomed silvern accents, Miss Estrilla started.

"Doctor Carver"—it was a deep male voice which proceeded from Rosalie's entranced lips; this male voice of her had been the envy of her old contemporaries—"a—ah! Doctor Carver, I come to speak of a young man. I see him near this place. I see a struggle about him. I see a glass of liquor on one side of him and a woman's hand on the other. He is drawing toward the woman's hands. I see her more clearly now. She has golden hair. I see him working far into the night. His hand is writing—ugh—" This was a kind of shuddering groan "I am going!" Another silence. Then a light flute-like voice—the accustomed tone of Laughing-Eyes, Rosalie's famous child control, and the most artistic thing she did.

"Flowers for a pretty lady!" came the voice of Laughing-Eyes. "Pretty lady is sick. Pretty lady is crying. It's bright here. And the spirits talk to me. One, two, three spirits talk to Laughing-Eyes. One of them wants the pretty lady—oh, ho's gone! He is weak. I am weak—good-by—pretty—" Rosalie's lips closed, and she settled down as though into deeper sleep. She waited through a space which seemed eternity. Presently she heard a rustling from the bed. Miss Estrilla had moved. Rosalie braced herself within for the shock of cold water. But Miss Estrilla only shook her. Rosalie made a sleepy motion and became still. Miss Estrilla shook her again, and called into her ear.

"Madame Le Grange—wake up!"

This time, Rosalie permitted her eyes to open. She stared a moment as at things remote, fetched another shudder, sat bolt upright. Her first expression was bewildered; her second startled. There followed every appearance of embarrassment and chagrin.

"Oh, what has happened?" she said.

"Don't you know?" asked Miss Estrilla, regarding her narrowly.

"I remember coming in here," said Rosalie, "an' I remember telling you that I might go out—fall asleep." She arose at this and began nervously to pace the room.

"I've got to apologize," she went on, "I am—well, the last time I was took this way, I went to my own room. When I came to, it was dark—the servants thought I'd gone away an' forgot to come home to dinner. I made up my mind I wouldn't let it happen again like that—an' you were the only person in the house. Was I out—asleep—long?"

"About six or seven minutes, I think," said Miss Estrilla. Suddenly she covered her eyes with their green shade.

"What does it mean, all this?" she asked.

"Poor dear, I believe I must have bothered you with my talking—if I did talk." She approached the bed, and sat down.

"Now, I'm goin' to tell you all about it," pursued Rosalie; "I must, of course. It ain't right not to explain, now I've made this scene. But you'll be the only livin' soul around the house that knows a thing, an' you'll understand what I mean when I'm through. Comin' right out with it, I've been a medium—a spirit medium—all my life. You know what that is, don't you?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Didn't know but you mightn't. Some folks don't, an' some hold a low opinion of 'em. I do myself." Rosalie paused. "That was why I cut it out, may-be—that and the feelin' that my powers was goin'. Well, one day comes a legacy—money I'd never counted on or expected. An' that happened jest when it seemed like my power had grown weak an' I had to quit or be a fake—because when people come an' pay you two dollars you have to deliver answers or you'll git no more custom. So I jest determined to drop it all an' go to keepin' boarders with my money."

Rosalie made the proper dramatic pause here, and let her voice fall.

"You can't do a thing all your life, though, an' stop it right away. I hadn't counted on that. I never could control my trances exactly. They had a way of comin' when they wanted to. You can hold it off for a while, an' then—it's like holdin' off sleep. Twice before this week it's happened—I've told you what I did the second time, an' how it scared me. An' just now, standin' in the hall, I felt it comin' on—strong. You know the rest. An' I hope you'll excuse me—an' you won't say a thing, will you?" Rosalie's voice held all the pleading in the world.

Miss Estrilla, expressionless behind her green shade, spoke in an even and unemotional voice.

"And what do your spirits say to you?"

"To me?" replied Rosalie; "goodness, I don't know. I wish I did. I have to find afterwards from other people what I said or did. Well, I'm as sorry as can be that I bothered you, an' won't do it again, if I can help it. Did I talk much?"

"Not a great deal. Something about a young man and a young woman."

"Anybody in the house? Sometimes—they tell me—my spirits talk about folks a thousand miles away an' sometimes about folks that are right here."

Miss Estrilla seemed to be considering this. When she spoke, her voice was still even and perfectly controlled; but she did not answer the question.

"You have been very kind," she said, "and I don't see why you should tell any one else. You may come here whenever you feel that way. It would be a pleasure to return your kindness."

Rosalie sighed as in relief.

"My! That's good. I didn't want to ask—it's a lot to ask of anybody—but now you've offered, I'll take it. I've been thinkin' lately it would be a good thing to let go of myself when I feel it comin', an' get it off my system. Was that the bell? Excuse me—I ain't sure that lazy Molly will answer it.—An' thank you, my dear."

The bell was only a peddler. When Rosalie had disposed of him, she consulted her watch. Much remained of the afternoon.

"Good time to git in an hour's session with that darned phonograph," she said; and she took refuge in her own big clothes-closet—which, experiment had shown, was sound-proof.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

HOW TO PLACE THE MIRROR

One Should Be Hung in a Dark Hall Where It Will Serve a Triple Purpose.

Always place a mirror in a dark hall. If it can be so placed that it reflects the opening into the living or drawingroom, it will serve a triple purpose—it will be a convenience to the guests and members of the family when they are starting out, it will increase the light and it will make the hall seem bigger.

In a living room place several mirrors, if the room is dark. Place them in rather unexpected places. A long narrow mirror can be hung lengthwise, perhaps in a corner beside a door. Another mirror can be placed on a wall opposite a window and so will reflect the garden or trees or sea or street and give the room apparently another window. Another mirror can be placed at such an angle that it will not necessarily reflect the people sitting about the fire. The object of living room mirrors is not to give reflections of the persons in the room, and such reflections are sometimes annoying.

In bedrooms and dressing rooms mirrors cannot be too many. A pier glass is convenient, and especially desirable because it can be placed across a corner of the room or in some other position which makes it of decorative value. But far more practical in a small room—and cheaper, too—is the mirror fastened to the door. It should be held in place by the wooden paneling.

Held to Their Carriage.

A man seated in his own private carriage placed upon a track at the end of a railway train would probably be considered a bit of a crank nowadays. Yet it was quite a common occurrence within the memory of many people still living. The late duke of Portland always traveled in that way between Welbeck and London. And in Notes and Queries the Rev. Sir David Hunter-Blair tells a story of a gentleman he knew in his youth who was wont to go from London to Brighton in the same fashion. Once the truck at the end of the train got disconnected in a tunnel, leaving the exclusive passenger seated stationary in his carriage—also in darkness and peril.

WILSON ANALYZES SELF TO PRESS MEN

President Tells What Office Means to Him.

SIZE OF TASK TREMENDOUS

Chief Executive Finds Pose of Dignity Irksome and Declares When Term Is Over He Will Visit Washington on Sightseeing Tour.

Washington, March 23.—Woodrow Wilson unbosomed himself to the members of the National Press club of Washington Friday, telling them in a frank, conversational way how he felt as president of the United States; how difficult it was for him to imagine himself as the chief executive with the formal amenities of the position, and how he had struggled to be as free as the ordinary individual without the restraints of his office.

It was an intimate picture of Woodrow Wilson—the man—drawn by himself, on the occasion of the "housewarming" at the Press club's new quarters.

The president did not intend to have his remarks reported, but later, at the request of the club, the speech was made public.

Wilson, as He Sees Himself.

"I was just thinking of my sense of confusion of identity sometimes when I read articles about myself," the president said. "I have never read an article about myself in which I recognized myself, and I have come to have the impression that I must be some kind of a fraud, because I think a great many of these articles are written in absolute good faith.

"I tremble to think of the variety and falseness in the impressions I make—and it is being borne in on me so that it may change my very disposition—that I am a cold and removed person who has a thinking machine inside which he adjusts to the circumstances—which he does not allow to be moved by any winds of affection or emotion of any kind—but turns like a cold searchlight on anything that is presented to his attention and makes it work.

Feels Responsibility Keenly.

"I am not aware of having any detachable apparatus inside of me. On the contrary, if I were to interpret myself, I would say that my constant embarrassment is to retain the emotions that are inside of me.

"You may not believe it, but I sometimes feel like a fire from a far from extinct volcano, and if the lava does not seem to spill over it is because you are not high enough to see into the basin and see the caldron boil. Because, truly, gentlemen, in the position which I occupy there is a sort of—I do not know how else to express it than to say—passionate sense of being connected with my fellow men in a peculiar relationship of responsibility of office, but God knows there are enough things in this world that need to be corrected.

Fear He'll Disappoint People.

"I have mixed first and last with all sorts and conditions of men—there are mighty few kinds of men that have to be described to me, and there are mighty few kinds of experiences that have to be described to me—and when I think of the number of men who are looking to me as the representative of a party, with the hope for all varieties of salvation from the things they are struggling in the midst of, it makes me tremble.

"It makes me tremble not only with a sense of my own inadequacy and weakness, but as if I were shaken by the very things that are shaking them, and if I seem circumspect it is because I am so diligently trying not to make any colossal blunders.

"If you just calculated the number of blunders a fellow can make in 24 hours if he is not careful and if he does not listen more than he talks, you would see something of the feeling that I have.

Always Eager to Get Advice.

"I was amused the other day at a remark that Senator Newlands made. I had read him the trust message that I was to deliver to congress some ten days before I delivered it, and I never stop 'doctoring' things of that kind until the day I have to deliver them.

"When he heard it read to congress he said: 'I think it was better than it was when you read it to me.' I said: 'Senator, there is one thing which I do not think you understand. I not only use all the brains I have, but all I can borrow, and I have borrowed a lot since I read it to you first.'

"That, I dare say, is what gives the impression of circumspectness. I am listening; I am diligently trying to collect all the brains that are borrowable in order that I may not make more blunders than it is inevitable that a man should make who has great limitations of knowledge and capacity. And the emotion of the thing is so great that I suppose I must be some kind of a mask to conceal it.

Often Feels He's Masquerading.

"I really feel sometimes as if I were masquerading when I catch a picture of myself in some printed description.

"In between things that I have to do as a public officer I never think of myself as the president of the United States, because I never have had any sense of being identified with that office.

"I feel like a person appointed for a certain length of time to administer that office, and I feel just as much outside of it at this moment as I did before I was elected to it. I feel just as much outside of it as I still feel outside of the government of the United States.

"No man could imagine himself the government of the United States; but he could understand that some part of his fellow citizens had told him to go and run a certain part of it the best he knew how.

"That would not make him the government itself or the thing itself. It would just make him responsible for running it the best he knew how.

Office So Great; Man So Small.

"The machine is so much greater than himself, the office is so much greater than he; the office is so much greater than he can ever be, and the most he can do is to look grave enough and self-possessed enough to seem to fill it.

"I can hardly refrain every now and again from tipping the public the wink, as much as to say, 'It is only me that is inside this thing. I know that I will have to get out presently. I know that then I will look just my own proper size, and that for the time being the proportions are somewhat refracted and misrepresented to the eye by the large thing I am inside of, from which I am tipping you this wink.'

"For example, take matters of this sort. I will not say whether it is wise or unwise; simple or grave, but certain precedents have been established that in certain companies the president must leave the room first and people must give way to him. They must not sit down if he is standing up.

Finds Customs Embarrassing.

"It is a very uncomfortable thing to have to think of all the other people every time I get up and sit down, and all that sort of thing. So when I get guests in my own house and the public is shut out, I adjourn being president and take leave to be a gentleman. If they draw back and insist upon my doing something first I firmly decline.

"There are blessed intervals when I forget by one means or another that I am president of the United States. One means by which I forget is to get a rattling good detective story, get after some imaginary offender, and chase him all over—preferably any continent but this—because the various parts of this continent are becoming painfully suggestive to me.

"The postoffices and many other things which stir reminiscences have 'sicklied them o'er with a pale cast of thought.' There are postoffices to which I wouldn't think of mailing a letter, which I can't think of without trembling with the knowledge of the heartburnings of the struggle there was in connection with getting somebody installed as postmaster.

Knows Little of Capital Sights.

"Now, if I were free, I would come not infrequently up to these rooms. You know I never was in Washington but a very few hours until I came last year and I never expect to see the inside of the public buildings in Washington until my term is over.

"The minute I turn up anywhere, I am personally conducted to beat the band. The curator, and the assistant curators, and every other blooming official turns up, and they show me so much attention that I don't see the building. I would have to say, 'Stand aside and let me see what you are showing me.'

"Some day, after I am through with this office, I am going to come back to Washington and see it. In the meantime, I am in the same category as the National museum, the monument, the Smithsonian institution, or the Congressional library, and everything that comes down here has to be shown the president.

"If I only knew an exhibition appearance to assume—apparently other appearances that do not show what is going on inside—I would like to have it pointed out, so that I could practise it before the looking glass and see if I could not look like the monument.

"Being regarded as a national exhibit, it would be much simpler than being shaken hands with by the whole United States. And yet, even that is interesting to me, simply because I like human beings.

"It is a pretty poor crowd that does not interest you. I think they would have to be all members of that class that devotes itself to 'expense regardless of pleasure' in order to be entirely uninteresting. These look so much alike—spend their time trying to look so much alike—and so relieve themselves of all responsibility of thought—that they are very monotonous indeed to look at! whereas a crowd picked up off the street is just a jolly lot—a job lot of real human beings, pulsating with life, with all kinds of passions and desires.

Plain Citizen, His Ambition.

"It would be a great pleasure if, unserved and unattended, I could be knocked around as I have been accustomed to be knocked around all my life; if I could resort to any delightful quarter, to any place in Washington that I chose. I have sometimes thought of going to some costumer—some theatrical costumer—and buying an assortment of beards, rouge, coloring, and all the known means of disguising myself, if it were not against the law. You see, I have a scruple as president against breaking the law and disguising one's self is against the law.

"But if I could disguise myself and not get caught I would go out, be a free American citizen once more, and have a jolly time. I might then meet some of you gentlemen and actually tell you what I really thought."

TORREON CAPTURED

VILLA'S REBELS KILL 1,500 HUERTA SOLDIERS IN TERRIFIC BATTLE.

CITY IS NOW IN FLAMES

Victors Apply Torch to Captured Town to Wipe Out Cholera—Defeated Troops Throw Away Arms to Avoid Being Shot.

El Verjel, Durango, March 26.—Torreon fell at five o'clock on Tuesday. General Villa won a complete and sweeping victory. The former bandit and refugee is now the absolute master of northern Mexico. There are only meager federal forces to resist his occupation of Monterey and Saltillo and Tampico on the east and Mazatlan on the west.

With the Huerta army under Velasco scattered and broken beyond repair at Torreon, the road to Mexico City lies open to Villa. Villa is being cheered by his men and his generals as the great military genius in Mexico.

General Velasco knew he was defeated when his forces were smashed and driven out of Gomez Palacio. He had realized that there was the place whose natural advantages gave him his best chance of stopping the advance of Villa with his 12,000 men against Velasco's 9,000. The artillery equipment of the opposing forces were about equal. Fleeing from Gomez Palacio in utter route, Velasco's men got no respite. The rebels pursued relentlessly. The federals' only hope was to hold the Nazas river against Villa with their batteries there. But their own guns were turned against them from the north, covering the advance of the forces of Villa and Benavides from the northeast, and when the Nazas batteries were silenced Torreon was doomed.

With 1,500 federals estimated to have been slain in the terrific fighting at Gomez Palacio, which ended in the rout of General Velasco's forces, Villa mercilessly pursued the beaten forces and then, with Torreon surrounded, Villa and General Benevides, with his famous Zaragosa brigade, led an onslaught from the east and northeast.

The fierce hand-to-hand fighting in the streets, the flaming of buildings put to the torch and the devastation generally that fell on Gomez Palacio also were visited on Torreon.

In the fierce fighting of the last 48 hours hundreds of federal troops broke from their ranks and deserted to Villa's army. They were held in the trenches under the onrush of the constitutionalists only by the actions of their officers, who shot into the backs of men who tried to flee. The loss of life on the federal side is believed to have been the heaviest of the present revolution, for Velasco's army fought in massed formations against a terrible artillery bombardment.

Corpses of cholera victims were strewn in all the federal trenches.

Fearful of an outbreak of the deadly disease in his own ranks, the conqueror issued orders for the burning of all barracks and hundreds of other buildings that might be suspected of having harbored the cholera stricken, so that Torreon is in conflagration.

Whetted by the crushing blow administered to Velasco's army at Gomez Palacio, nothing could stay the advance of Villa's men. The way led for four miles through apparently impassable territory. The gun carriages went into the mud to their hubs; barbed wire barricades were every few hundred feet of the way, quagmires and canals had to be crossed and all the time a pounding fire was in their faces from the batteries on the Nazas river.

Benevides added terror by setting fire to all buildings along his approach to the plaza and issuing orders to his men to shoot down all found with arms. Velasco's men heard the shouted orders and began flinging away their weapons and scurrying up the streets. The federals utterly abandoned their wounded in the fields of Gomez Palacio and Torreon.

SLAVERY OF COLONIAL DAYS

Could we draw the curtain which conceals the life of prehistoric people, we should see that the servant problem is as old as the human race. Indeed, if it were possible for extremes to meet, cave-dwellers and denizens of twentieth century sky-scrapers would doubtless converse sympathetically on this never-ending problem. Its existence is due to the universal desire of man to use the strength of others for his own profit and pleasure—an unchangeable trait of human nature.

During the colonial period of our history, service was performed in the main by two classes—the negro slave and the indentured white servant, writes Prof. Marcus W. Jernegan in Harper's Magazine. The white servant, a semi-slave, was more important in the seventh century than even the negro slave, in respect to both numbers and economic significance. Perhaps the most pressing of the early needs of the colonists was for a certain and adequate supply of labor. It was the white servants who supplied this demand and made possible a rapid economic development, particularly of the middle and southern colonies. In 1683 there were 12,000 of these semi-slaves in Virginia, composing about one-sixth of the population, while nearly two-thirds of the immigrants to Pennsylvania during the eighteenth century were white servants. Every other colony made greater or less use of them, and it is likely that more than half a million persons were of this class during the colonial period.

Woman's Observation.

A woman's powers of observation are fearfully and wonderfully made. She can be introduced to a strange gentleman, and after two minutes of casual conversation she can tell you his habitual state of temper, whether his wife affects domesticity or clubs, and whether or not he is happy in his home and living within his income. She can go to a social function where there are 20 women she never saw before, and come back with an inventory of what each one wore, how much it cost, whether any part of the costume was "made over," what changes it needed to make it really becoming, and whether the wearer could afford it.

After she has finished imparting this information she can write down from memory, without making more than three mistakes in each, half a dozen new recipes for onion preserves and asparagus shortcake that she picked up at the same gathering.

THE TRUTH ABOUT TAXES.

The Palmyra Enterprise makes a very pertinent observation on the subject of state expenses. Here it is:

"Some people are always in favor of improvement if "the state pays for it," believing that by so much are their taxes lessened. Bless your dear hearts, where do you suppose the state gets the money? Right out of your pockets. Did you think it was going to drop down out of a generous heaven? Nay, verily. Just remember that the dear people pay the taxes—first, last and all the time."

There can't be state expenses without state taxes. Every dollar that is taken out of the state treasury must be put in first, and must be secured by tapping the pockets of the people. Even those citizens who fancy themselves immune because they pay no state tax directly are really contributors with the rest. They pay indirectly in many ways—without knowing it, perhaps; but they pay.

That is not all. There is a great deal of waste connected with whatever the state undertakes. State activities make occasion for the multiplication of office holders, many of whom work very little at the tasks for which they are nominally employed andvery much at the game of politics—setting up political pins in the interest of the men who gave them their appointments, and very frequently by so doing going counter to the desires of the people.

Governor McGovern does not mention these facts in his great speech on state taxes and why the people of Wisconsin should be grateful to be afforded the opportunity to pay them, but facts are they are, and facts well worth consideration. Tax payers mindful of Wisconsin's welfare are likely in view of these facts to cast their ballots this year in such a way as to defeat McGovern and McGovernism, and stop the alarming increase of taxation in Wisconsin.—Evening Wisconsin.

Discoverers in Politics.

Soon after Henry M. Stanley found Dr. Livingston in darkest Africa, Major Pond made a contract with Stanley for one hundred lectures in the United States. The first lecture was to be delivered in Boston; and in order to promote the success of the venture Mark Twain was secured to introduce Stanley. And sure enough, Twain made a great hit. He introduced the lecturer not as an explorer, but as a discoverer. He said that Stanley was a greater discoverer than Columbus. "It is true," he said, "Columbus discovered America. But," he said "America lies stretched out from the north pole almost to the south pole. All he had to do was to sail westward and he couldn't fail to find it. But Stanley discovered Livingston in the heart of Africa which was like finding a needle in a haystack."

The Democrat is reminded of this story by the fact that two candidates for the Republican nomination for governor—Speaker Hull and Assemblyman Roethe—are running on their records as discoverers. They have been in the legislatures for several years, and they have made what seems to them a remarkable discovery, namely: that Republican administrations are extravagant and costly. Why, this can hardly be called a discovery at all. It is only what we, as Democrats, told them in the beginning. If it maye be called a discovery, a very large majority of taxpayers have certainly discovered it without going up to the state capital.

If Candidates Hull and Roethe had only discovered a way to keep down expenditures, they would have discovered something worth while. But they didn't do it. The longer they were in the legislature the higher grew expenditures.

For legislators with a record for keeping down state expenses it is necessary to hark back to the lawmakers of 1891 and 1893.—Mineral Point Democrat.

Are the prices much too high?

Paint 'em green, or paint 'em white!
Close up all them places tight!

Pass a law!

CAPITALIZING FRESH AIR.

The owner of one of the largest chains of moving picture theaters in this section of the country privately attributes his success to fresh air. In the first theatre he established, enormous ventilating fans were installed. In his latest theaters, ventilation receives as much attention as decoration, seating, etc.

Ventilating on a big scale is expensive. Rapidly exhausting the warm air means a big drain on the heating system. Furnaces must be driven hard to supply sufficient heat to warm the fresh air to a comfortable temperature. The man who manages must close his eyes to the shrinkage of the coal pile. It's his business to watch the increase in the cash pile in the box office.

This astute manager clearly recognizes the fact that an audience's enjoyment is not dependent alone upon the pictures and other entertainment afforded.

He credits a considerable proportion of his patronage to choice of his theaters over those of competitors through a vague undefined sense of physical comfort and well-being not experienced in the other theaters.

He says: "In the ordinary hall, it's a rattling good show in which there is no twisting in seats, shuffling of feet and other signs of restlessness. I know from observation that this nervousness is mainly due to stuffy air. In a perfectly comfortable atmosphere, the patron is not nearly so critical. A reasonably good film 'gets across.' The average patron doesn't analyze the reason why he is, or is not, enjoying himself. Perhaps I save my ventilating cost on wear and tear on furniture and carpets. I haven't figured that out. I don't much care. I am satisfied to know that furnishing fresh air has been good business for me."

This man is making a phenomenal financial success. He is proving that stage magicians and fake promoters are not the only ones who can reach out and extract dollars from undiluted air.

The Cost of Farm Power.

The profits of any manufacturing business depend largely upon the securing of cheap raw material and cheap fuel. The cities along the Great Lakes, comprising, as they do, the greatest manufacturing center in the world, owe their existence to cheap iron, cheap lumber, and cheap coal. In exactly the same way the profits of the individual farm depend primarily upon the ability of the farmer to come onto the market with a product that has cost him less than its manufacture has cost his neighbor, whether that neighbor happens to live across the road, or in Canada, or the Argentine.

One of the most considerable costs of farming is the fuel bill. Every pound of hay consumed, every bushel of oats or corn fed, every acre devoted to pasture, bears the same relation, up to a certain point, that coal does to the profits of a factory business. A horse is fed oats to produce power just as an engine is fed coal to the same end.. Dear oats and hay mean costly production of the cash product, whether that product be wheat or butter fat. In order to cut the cost of power it is necessary for the farmer to get the largest possible yield off his pasture and hay lands, and from his crops of oats and corn. By increasing his yield per acre of these crops, he cuts down the acreage it is necessary to devote to them, cheapens the bushel cost of production, and seets free a larger acreage to be devoted to crops producing an immediate cash return.

In other words, twenty bushels of oats to the acre is not profitable. Thirty bushels is too expensive. Fifty bushels cuts the fuel cost of plowing down to a point where the wheat grower can grow wheat, or the butter fat manufacturer can produce clover and silage for his cows at a cost which will leave a margin of profit at going prices. And while higher prices for the output of the farm may be desirable, and possibly attainable in certain directions, due to better systems of marketing, the farmer cannot hope to evade the first great law of manufacture, that cheap fuel is necessary if profits are to be assured—and in his case cheap fuel is hay, oats and corn.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Make the Best of It.

A merry heart, a merry laugh,
A face with lots of sun in it,
A merry tongue with merry chaff
And quip with lots of fun in it!

If trouble comes—and troubles will
When others make a guest of it
Keep on a smiling face and still
Strive on and make the best of it.

And if the worst comes to the worst
And life has no more zest in it—
Well, there are fewer clouds to burst
So why not make the best of it?

Then learn to leave behind you care,
A fool but walks abreast of it.
Don't be a victim to despair,
But always make the best of it.

—La Touche Hancock.

WIS. LIVE STOCK NOTES

In addition to the marked increase in the dairy industry in Wisconsin, a remarkable gain in the value of milch cows per head is to be noted since 1910. On January 1st of that year, according to averages quoted by the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association, the average value per head was $36.60; for 1913 it was $47.70 and for 1914 is $59.90. These averages make the total valuation of dairy cows in Wisconsin as follows; January 1st, 1910, $53,912,000; January 1st, 1913, $71,741,000; January 1st, 1914, $92,985,000. The rapid increase in the value per head is due, in part, to a demand for dairy cows that far exceeds the supply, but the most important factor that has caused by cow testing associations which get rid of the boarders and account for the greater prevalence of the blood improved breeds.

The sheep returns more meat per 100 pounds of feed consumed than does the steer and if the amount of roughage they eat is considered, they produce meat more economically than the hog. Wool is a by-product of the meat making process. Sheep are prolific—a flock not yielding an increase of at least 100 per cent is poor indeed. They are our most useful scavengers, clearing the farm of weeds and brush in a surprisingly short time. All these points are well known, but in spite of them, sheep are decreasing in number in Wisconsin. Our dogs and internal parasites are probably the most potent factors that curtail the industry. It seems well night impossible to get a dog law on the statutes, either state or national, and the loss occasioned by stray dogs is enormous every year. Internal parasites cause as much loss, or more, than do the dogs. Stomach worms are the most common. No infallible cure for them is known, but it is possible, with proper treatment and management, to largely control the loss caused by them. Another factor which, no doubt, limits the mutton production on farms, is that too much importance has been placed upon the production of wool. Raising sheep for wool alone does not pay except upon cheap land. Sheep are raised on some of the most expensive land in England, but they produce meat primarily. If one fourth of the farms now not having sheep yould maintain a flock of from 25 to 30 ewes, reasonably well managed and protected from dogs, farm incomes would be increased and some advance would be given the meat supply. Sheep should occupy a more prominent place on Wisconsin farms.

Requests for the "More and Better Live Stock Special" to be operated by the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders Association over the "Northwestern" lines in Northeastern Wisconsin some time during 1914 have been numerous at the office of the secretary, Madison, Wis. Judging from the general tone of the letters, the officers are certain that they will be ably and materially assisted by the hearty cooperation of local institutions and individuals. For the information of those wishing to have the special stop at their town, the association officials advise that they expect assurance of support and publicity before any action will be taken to include a town in the itinerary.

Huxley and Lewes.

Here is an anecdote once related by Herbert Spencer—who, by the way, was rather heavy in hand when he undertook to play story teller. Apropos of Huxley's humor he described a dinner of distinguished authors:

Over their cigarettes they fell to discussing their various methous of commencing to write. One said he wrote and wrote, tore up, then wrote again, and so on.

George Lewes, who was present, looked surprised, and then cried out:

"Oh, I'm not like that! I commence to write at once, directly the pen is in my hand. In fact, I boil at a low temperature."

"Indeed," cut in Mr. Huxley, "that is very interesting, for, as you know, to boil at a low temperature implies a vacuum in the upper region."

Lewes himself was the first to lead the shout of laughter which greeted this clever repartee.

Upon receiving his ballots, the voter must retire alone to a booth or compartment and prepare the same for voting. A ballot clerk may inform the voter as to the proper manner of marking a ballot, but he must not advise or indicate in any manner whom to vote for.

The ballot must not be shown so that any person can see how it has been marked by the voter.

After the ballot is marked it should be folded so that the inside cannot be seen, but so that the printed endorsements and signatures of the ballot clerks on the outside may be seen. Then the voter should pass out of the booth or compartment, give his name to the inspector in charge of the ballot box, hand him his ballot to be placed in the box, and pass out of the voting place.

A voter, who declares to the presiding officer that he is unable to read, or that by reason of physical disability he is unable to mark his ballot, can have assistance of one or two election officers in marking same, to be chosen by the voter; and if he declares that he is totally blind, he may be assisted by any person chosen by him fromamong the legal voters of the county. The presiding officer may administer an oath in his discretion, as to such person's disability.

A Perfect Separator Oiling System

The new system of De Laval automatic oiling provides for a constant and liberal supply of CLEAN oil to every wearing surface of the machine at all times. There are no oil holes to fill up with dirt or perhaps to be neglected altogether, and every part is supplied with clean oil from the oil reservoir automatically and constantly.

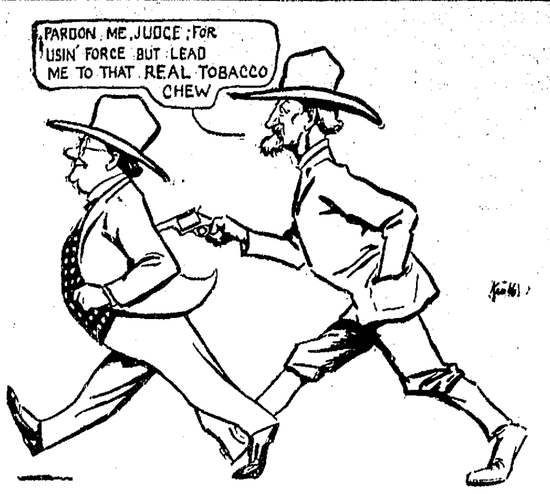

In other, so-called, automatic oiling systems some of the parts have to be oiled by hand and no provision is made for getting rid of dirt that may get into the oil from the outside or of small particles of metal which come from wear, so that after a short time the oil supply becomes foul and injurious to the finely adjusted wearing parts.

DE LAVAL

CREAM SEPARATORS have the only automatic oiling system which provides for a constant supply of fresh oil and, at the same time, the constant discharge of the used oil together with all worn metal particles or dirt which may have gotten into the used oil.

The perfect system of De Laval lubrication means an easier running and a much longer wearing machine. Come in and let us explain the advantages of De Laval automatic oiling.

THE TRUTH ABOUT TAXES.

The Palmyra Enterprise makes a very pertinent observation on the subject of state expenses. Here it is:

"Some people are always in favor of improvement if "the state pays for it," believing that by so much are their taxes lessened. Bless your dear hearts, where do you suppose the state gets the money? Right out of your pockets. Did you think it was going to drop down out of a generous heaven? Nay, verily. Just remember that the dear people pay the taxes—first, last and all the time."

There can't be state expenses without state taxes. Every dollar that is taken out of the state treasury must be put in first, and must be secured by tapping the pockets of the people. Even those citizens who fancy themselves immune because they pay no state tax directly are really contributors with the rest. They pay indirectly in many ways—without knowing it, perhaps; but they pay.

That is not all. There is a great deal of waste connected with whatever the state undertakes. State activities make occasion for the multiplication of office holders, many of whom work very little at the tasks for which they are nominally employed andvery much at the game of politics—setting up political pins in the interest of the men who gave them their appointments, and very frequently by so doing going counter to the desires of the people.

Governor McGovern does not mention these facts in his great speech on state taxes and why the people of Wisconsin should be grateful to be afforded the opportunity to pay them, but facts are they are, and facts well worth consideration. Tax payers mindful of Wisconsin's welfare are duty in view of these facts to cast their ballots this year in such a way as to defeat McGovern and McGovernism, and stop the alarming increase of taxation in Wisconsin.—Evening Wisconsin.

Discoverers in Politics.

Soon after Henry M. Stanley found Dr. Livingston in darkest Africa, Major Pond made a contract with Stanley for one hundred lectures in the United States. The first lecture was to be delivered in Boston; and in order to promote the success of the venture Mark Twain was secured to introduce Stanley. And sure enough, Twain made a great hit. He introduced the lecturer not as an explorer, but as a discoverer. He said that Stanley was a greater discoverer than Columbus. "It is true," he said, "Columbus discovered America. But," he said "America lies stretched out from the north pole almost to the south pole. All he had to do was to sail westward and he couldn't fail to find it. But Stanley discovered Livingston in the heart of Africa which was like finding a needle in a haystack."

The Democrat is reminded of this story by the fact that two candidates for the Republican nomination for governor—Speaker Hull and Assemblyman Roethe—are running on their records as discoverers. They have been in the legislatures for several years, and they have made what seems to them a remarkable discovery, namely: that Republican administrations are extravagant and costly. Why, this can hardly be called a discovery at all. It is only what we, as Democrats, told them in the beginning. If it maye be called a discovery, a very large majority of taxpayers have certainly discovered it without going up to the state capital.

If Candidates Hull and Roethe had only discovered a way to keep down expenditures, they would have discovered something worth while. But they didn't do it. The longer they were in the legislature the higher grew expenditures.

For legislators with a record for keeping down state expenses it is necessary to hark back to the lawmakers of 1891 and 1893.—Mineral Point Democrat.

CAPITALIZING FRESH AIR.

The owner of one of the largest chains of moving picture theaters in this section of the country privately attributes his success to fresh air. In the first theatre he established, enormous ventilating fans were installed. In his latest theaters, ventilation receives as much attention as decoration, seating, etc.

Ventilating on a big scale is expensive. Rapidly exhausting the warm air means a big drain on the heating system. Furnaces must be driven hard to supply sufficient heat to warm the fresh air to a comfortable temperature. The man who manages must close his eyes to the shrinkage of the coal pile. It's his business to watch the increase in the cash pile in the box office.

This astute manager clearly recognizes the fact that an audience's enjoyment is not dependent alone upon the pictures and other entertainment afforded.

He credits a considerable proportion of his patronage to choice of his theaters over those of competitors through a vague undefined sense of physical comfort and well-being not experienced in the other theaters.

He says: "In the ordinary hall, it's a rattling good show in which there is no twisting in seats, shuffling of feet and other signs of restlessness. I know from observation that this nervousness is mainly due to stuffy air. In a perfectly comfortable atmosphere, the patron is not nearly so critical. A reasonably good film 'gets across.' The average patron doesn't analyze the reason why he is, or is not, enjoying himself. Perhaps I save my ventilating cost on wear and tear on furniture and carpets. I haven't figured that out. I don't much care. I am satisfied to know that furnishing fresh air has been good business for me."

This man is making a phenomenal financial success. He is proving that stage magicians and fake promoters are not the only ones who can reach out and extract dollars from undiluted air.

The Cost of Farm Power.

The profits of any manufacturing business depend largely upon the securing of cheap raw material and cheap fuel. The cities along the Great Lakes, comprising, as they do, the greatest manufacturing center in the world, owe their existence to cheap iron, cheap lumber, and cheap coal. In exactly the same way the profits of the individual farm depend primarily upon the ability of the farmer to come onto the market with a product that has cost him less than its manufacture has cost his neighbor, whether that neighbor happens to live across the road, or in Canada, or the Argentine.

One of the most considerable costs of farming is the fuel bill. Every pound of hay consumed, every bushel of oats or corn fed, every acre devoted to pasture, bears the same relation, up to a certain point, that coal does to the profits of a factory business. A horse is fed oats to produce power just as an engine is fed coal to the same end. Dear oats and hay mean costly production of the cash product, whether that product be wheat or butter fat. In order to cut the cost of power it is necessary for the farmer to get the largest possible yield off his pasture and hay lands, and from his crops of oats and corn. By increasing his yield per acre of these crops, he cuts down the acreage it is necessary to devote to them, cheapens the bushel cost of production, and seets free a larger acreage to be devoted to crops producing an immediate cash return.

In other words, twenty bushels of oats to the acre is not profitable. Thirty bushels is too expensive. Fifty bushels cuts the fuel cost of plowing down to a point where the wheat grower can grow wheat, or the butter fat manufacturer can produce clover and silage for his cows at a cost which will leave a margin of profit at going prices. And while higher prices for the output of the farm may be desirable, and possibly attainable in certain directions, due to better systems of marketing, the farmer cannot hope to evade the first great law of manufacture, that cheap fuel is necessary if profits are to be assured—and in his case cheap fuel is hay, oats and corn.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Make the Best of It.

A merry heart, a merry laugh,
A face with lots of sun in it,
A merry tongue with merry chaff
And quip with lots of fun in it!

If trouble comes—and troubles will
When others make a guest of it
Keep on a smiling face and still
Strive on and make the best of it.

And if the worst comes to the worst
And life has no more zest in it—
Well, there are fewer clouds to burst
So why not make the best of it?

Then learn to leave behind you care,
A fool but walks abreast of it.
Don't be a victim to despair,
But always make the best of it.

—La Touche Hancock.

Name Your Farm.

Every farmer in Wood county should name his farm.

It lends dignity to the farmers profession and establishse a reputation for each farm, peculiarly its own.

Use stationery with the name of the farm on it.

The business of farming demands well printed stationery as much as any other business. The satisfaction you will get from the use of printed stationery is worth more than the small sum it will cost.

WIS. LIVE STOCK NOTES

In addition to the marked increase in the dairy industry in Wisconsin, a remarkable gain in the value of milch cows per head is to be noted since 1910. On January 1st of that year, according to averages quoted by the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association, the average value per head was $36.60; for 1913 it was $47.70 and for 1914 is $59.90. These averages make the total valuation of dairy cows in Wisconsin as follows; January 1st, 1910, $53,912,000; January 1st, 1913, $71,741,000; January 1st, 1914, $92,985,000. The rapid increase in the value per head is due, in part, to a demand for dairy cows that far exceeds the supply, but the most important factor that has caused by cow testing associations which get rid of the boarders and account for the greater prevalence of the blood improved breeds.

The sheep returns more meat per 100 pounds of feed consumed than does the steer and if the amount of roughage they eat is considered, they produce meat more economically than the hog. Wool is a by-product of the meat making process. Sheep are prolific—a flock not yielding an increase of at least 100 per cent is poor indeed. They are our most useful scavengers, clearing the farm of weeds and brush in a surprisingly short time. All these points are well known, but in spite of them, sheep are decreasing in number in Wisconsin. Our dogs and internal parasites are probably the most potent factors that curtail the industry. It seems well night impossible to get a dog law on the statutes, either state or national, and the loss occasioned by stray dogs is enormous every year. Internal parasites cause as much loss, or more, than do the dogs. Stomach worms are the most common. No infallible cure for them is known, but it is possible, with proper treatment and management, to largely control the loss caused by them. Another factor which, no doubt, limits the mutton production on farms, is that too much importance has been placed upon the production of wool. Raising sheep for wool alone does not pay except upon cheap land. Sheep are raised on some of the most expensive land in England, but they produce meat primarily. If one fourth of the farms now not having sheep yould maintain a flock of from 25 to 30 ewes, reasonably well managed and protected from dogs, farm incomes would be increased and some advance would be given the meat supply. Sheep should occupy a more prominent place on Wisconsin farms.

Requests for the "More and Better Live Stock Special" to be operated by the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders Association over the "Northwestern" lines in Northeastern Wisconsin some time during 1914 have been numerous at the office of the secretary, Madison, Wis. Judging from the general tone of the letters, the officers are certain that they will be ably and materially assisted by the hearty cooperation of local institutions and individuals. For the information of those wishing to have the special stop at their town, the association officials advise that they expect assurance of support and publicity before any action will be taken to include a town in the itinerary.

Huxley and Lewes.

Here is an anecdote once related by Herbert Spencer—who, by the way, was rather heavy in hand when he undertook to play story teller. Apropos of Huxley's humor he described a dinner of distinguished authors:

Over their cigarettes they fell to discussing their various methods of commencing to write. One said he wrote and wrote, tore up, then wrote again, and so on.

George Lewes, who was present, looked surprised, and then cried out:

"Oh, I'm not like that! I commence to write at once, directly the pen is in my hand. In fact, I boil at a low temperature."

"Indeed," cut in Mr. Huxley, "that is very interesting, for, as you know, to boil at a low temperature implies a vacuum in the upper region."

Lewes himself was the first to lead the shout of laughter which greeted this clever repartee.

A Perfect Separator Oiling System

The new system of De Laval automatic oiling provides for a constant and liberal supply of CLEAN oil to every wearing surface of the machine at all times. There are no oil holes to fill up with dirt or perhaps to be neglected altogether, and every part is supplied with clean oil from the oil reservoir automatically and constantly.

In other, so-called, automatic oiling systems some of the parts have to be oiled by hand and no provision is made for getting rid of dirt that may get into the oil from the outside or of small particles of metal which come from wear, so that after a short time the oil supply becomes foul and injurious to the finely adjusted wearing parts.

DE LAVAL

CREAM SEPARATORS have the only automatic oiling system which provides for a constant supply of fresh oil and, at the same time, the constant discharge of the used oil together with all worn metal particles or dirt which may have gotten into the used oil.

The perfect system of De Laval lubrication means an easier running and a much longer wearing machine. Come in and let us explain the advantages of De Laval automatic oiling.

Marshfield Herald.—John Farrish, one of the foremost citizens of Grand Rapids, was in the city Monday. In the lumber period of this portion of Wisconsin Mr. Farrish, at the head of the John Farrish Lumber Co., did an extensive business. As a souvenir of those days he owns considerable land in Wood county, one of his holdings being a 400 acre farm near Sherry which he is offering for sale as he intends to retire from active life. He came to Grand Rapids in 1857 and has lived there ever since.

Much adverse criticism has been said of "catalogue house stuff" but a farmer over in Dane county owes his life to a pair of catalogue house pants. While elevating corn into a crib his pants caught in the machinery, and had it not been for the fact that the goods were poor and tore readily he would have been killed. He escaped with a broken leg, but minus a pair of pants. There is a feature of advertising in this which catalogueers should not overlook.—Exchange.

Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Wells spent Friday and Saturday at Oshkosh.

Wilbur Herschleb has purchased the Maxwell runabout formerly owned by Dr. Ridgeman.

—Sterizol-A household necessity.

If you have anything to sell, try the Tribune want column. It does the business.

A. H. Kayser of the town of Grand Rapids was a business visitor in the city on Monday. While here he favored the Tribune office with a pleasant call.

Mr. and Mrs. Judd Blaisdell returned to their home at Trout Lake Saturday after spending two weeks in the city visiting at the Henry Sampson home.

Kirk Muir of Waukesha is spending a few days in the city visiting with friends and relatives. Kirk is looking well and is now engaged in working at Waukesha.

Con Roberts, Mosinee's invincible base ball pitcher who kept them all guessing in the Central Wisconsin league last summer and made the Wausau leaguers sit up and take notice, will go to Oshkosh this spring to play with that team. Con's friends feel confident that he will make good in the W. I. league.—Mosinee Times.

—Reliable druggists say that Barker's Remedy for Coughs, Colds, Catarrh and Rheumatism is the best medicine they have ever handled. In fact there is nothing like it.

R. W. Rezin of Cranmoor was among the pleasant callers at the Tribune office on Monday afternoon. Mr. Rezin is one of the members of the jury, but as those who were not employed on the Conner case were excused until Thursday morning he was enabled to return home. Mr. Rezin reports everything looking fine down on the marsh with good prospects for the coming season.

—If you are considering purchasing a car for the summer be sure and investigate the trusty Ford car. Don't forget that it is the only car a man with an ordinary income can afford to operate. It's the best car on the market for the money and all you need do is to talk to an owner of a Ford and see that he has to say. Huntington & Lessig have a number of 1914 cars on hand at $5.50 F. O. B. Detroit.

A statewide and concerted move in opposition to prohibition is planned by the Milwaukee branch of the German-American alliance. A resolution passed by that body sets forth that it will support only such candidates for congress and state legislature who have declared their accord with the fundamental principles to the allaince in regard to prohibition. Party affiliations will be ignored in their campaign against prohibition.

If our young men are wise and truly have great ability, they will remain at home, at least a season longer until their wisdom teeth are cut. It is more satisfactory to be a prominent and respected citizen of a village than to be an insignificant stranger, jostled and ignored by the hurrying mass of humanity in a metropolis. We would rather be a dog on a farm than a caged lion in a menagerie.—Antigo News Item.

Every person when he takes up his cards at a game of whist holds one out of 635,013,559,600 possible hands. As for the total number of variations possible among players, it is so enormous as almost to exceed belief. Mr. Babbage calculated that if 1,000,000 men were to be engaged dealing cards at the rate of one deal every minute, day and night for 100,000,000 years, they would not have exhausted all the possible variations of cards, but only 100,000th part of them.

Young Man loses Foot.—An attempt to ride a few rods out of Rio station clinging to the side of a train cost Frank Deitsch his right foot. He and a friend just returned to Rio from Portage on passenger No. 18 Sunday afternoon. As the train pulled out, the young man grasped the hand rail of one of the cars to swing on and go as far as the nearby street crossing. A baggage truck on the depot platform, standing near the train, struck him and broke his hold on the car. Deitsch fell under the car. He managed to roll his body and legs clear of the slowly moving train, but the wheels caught one foot, crushing it hopelessly.

The indications are that the little village of Nekoosa is going to have the time of its life in locating the new bridge which they propose to build there. That is the way it goes. When a town gets big enough to begin to amount to something, something always crops up that puts a damper on progress, and has a tendency to divide the people into factions so that when a new measure is proposed, by either faction, there are always plenty to buck the proposition. Down at Nekoosa it is the "Loop" residents against those from the north end, and each faction is determined that the bridge shall be in his end of the town. They openly state that they would rather not see the bridge built than to give in to the other fellow. As a matter of fact, it does not make much difference which end of town the bridge is built in.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

Grand Rapids, Wis., March 27th, 1914. To the Editor of the Tribune:

Allow me to say a few words thru the columns of your paper regarding the article published in the Daily Reporter, March 25th, 1914, entitled: "Are we Asleep? Wake up!" Signed "Observer."

An unsigned article, the author of which being ashamed to sign his name, is not worthy of being published much less read. Now, Mr. "Observer" are you an observer on the locomotive of progress to avoid danger to the train and passengers, or are you simply "An Observer" on the observation car, on the rear end of the train, to watch the rails pass by? Are you a citizen of Grand Rapids, or from Meehan Station? Are you a public spirited citizen for the welfare of our city and community? Do you know the meaning of the words "A wide-open Town" or "A Closed-up town?" Do you know the laws, rules and regulations of our City regarding the same? Are you a tax payer in our city, or are you an outsider? Or are you just simply a knocker, to knock everything in our city, and besmear our good name and reputation? The woods are full of knockers and that is the right place for them. If you are simply a knocker and have no good word to say for our city, you had better take to the woods and go to sleep. We want to be wide awake, and build up our city for our citizens and for our community. You better clean up your own front door steps before advising others. Reform yourself first, before you try to reform your neighbor.

Now, Mr. "Observer," if you want me to answer you, please sign your name to your articles, like a man, and do not get personal or malicious and I will gladly answer. Or you can present your complaint to me in person, and it will be attended to. For the Lord's sake, for our manufacturers, industries, business and laboring men, give us peace and plenty.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

Grand Rapids, Wis., March 27th, 1914. To the Editor of the Tribune:

Allow me to say a few words thru the columns of your paper regarding the article published in the Daily Reporter, March 25th, 1914, entitled: "Are we Asleep" Wake up!" Signed "Observer."

An unsigned article, the author of which being ashamed to sign his name, is not worthy of being published much less read. Now, Mr. "Observer" are you an observer on the locomotive of progress to avoid danger to the train and passengers, or are you simply "An Observer" on the observation car, on the rear end of the train, to watch the rails pass by? Are you a citizen of Grand Rapids, or from Meehan Station? Are you a public spirited citizen for the welfare of our city and community? Do you know the meaning of the words "A wide-open Town" or "A Closed-up town?" Do you know the laws, rules and regulations of our City regarding the same? Are you a tax payer in our city, or are you an outsider? Or are you just simply a knocker, to knock everything in our city, and besmear our good name and reputation? The woods are full of knockers and that is the right place for them. If you are simply a knocker and have no good word to say for our city, you had better take to the woods and go to sleep. We want to be wide awake, and build up our city for our citizens and for our community. You better clean up your own front door steps before advising others. Reform yourself first, before you try to reform your neighbor.

Now, Mr. "Observer," if you want me to answer you, please sign your name to your articles, like a man, and do not get personal or malicious and I will gladly answer. Or you can present your complaint to me in person, and it will be attended to. For the Lord's sake, for our manufacturers, industries, business and laboring men, give us peace and plenty.

J. A. COHEN, Mayor.

ELECTION NOTICE

Office of the City Clerk, March 20th, 1914.

To the Electors of Grand Rapids, Wisconsin:

Notice is hereby given that a judicial, national delegate and municipal election is to be held in the several wards and election precincts in the city of Grand Rapids, on the seventh day of April A. D. 1914, at which the officers named below are to be chosen. The names of the candidates for each office to be voted for whose nominations have been certified to this office, are given opposite to the title of the office and under the proper party or other designations, each in its proper column, and the question submitted to a vote are as stated below:

Information to Voters

The following instructions are given for the information and guidance of voters: (a) A voter upon entering the poling place and giving his name and residence, will receive a ballot from the ballot clerk which must have endorsed thereon the names or initials of both ballot clerks, and no other ballot can be used. Upon receiving this ballot, the voter must retire alone to a booth or compartment and prepare the same for voting. A ballot clerk may inform the voters to the proper manner of marking a ballot, but he must not advise or indicate in any manner whom to vote for.

(b) If a voter wishes to vote for all the candidates nominated by any party he shall make a cross or other mark under the party designation printed at the top of the ballot in the circle made for that purpose. A ballot so marked and having no other mark will be counted for all the candidates of that party in the column underneath, unless the names of some of the candidates of the party have been erased or a name shall be written in, or a cross mark be placed in the square at the right of the name or names of candidates in another column. If the voter does not wish to vote for all the candidates nominated by one party, he shall mark his ballot by making a cross or mark in the square at the right of the name of the candidate for whom he intends to vote or by inserting or writing in the name of the candidate.

(c) The ballot should not be marked in any other manner. If the ballot be spoiled, it must be returned to the ballot clerk, who must issue another in its stead, but no more than three in all shall be issued to any one voter. Five minutes time is allowed in booth to mark ballot. Unofficial or memorandum to assist the voter in marking his ballot can be taken into the booth, and may be used to copy from. The ballot must not be shown so that any person can see how it has been marked by the voter.

(d) After is is marked it should be folded so that the inside cannot be seen, but so that the printed indorsements and signatures of the ballot clerks on the outside may be seen. Then the voter should pass out of the booth or compartment, give his name to the inspector in charge of the ballot box, hand him his ballot to be placed in the box and pass out of the voting place.

(e) A voter, who declares to the presiding officer that he is unable to read, or that by reason of physical disability he is unable to mark his ballot, can have assistanct of one or two election officers in marking same, to be chosen by the voter; and if he declares that he is totally blind, he may be assisted by any person chosen by him from among the legal voters of the county. The Usages of Royalty.

A patriotic Scotsman was present at a meeting of a certain society at which an eminent Shakesperian scholar dwelt on the virtues of his favorite author. At the close of the meeting the Scot approached the lecturer, and the following dialogue took place:

"Ye thing a fine lot o' Shakespeare, doctor?"

"I do, sir," was the emphatic reply.

"An' ye think he was mair clever than Rabbie Burns?"

"Why; there is no comparison between them.

"Maybe no, but ye telt us tonicht it was Shakespeare who wrote 'Uneasy lies the head that wears a croon'. Now, Rabbie would never hae written sic nonsense at that."

"Nonsense, sir?" cried the indignant doctor.

"Aye, just nonsense. Rabbie would hae kent that a king, or a queen either, disna gang to bed wi' the croon on his head. He wad hang it over th' back o' a chair."

COULDN'T FOOL THE JUDGE.

He Knew an Actor or a Burglar When He Saw One.

De Wolf Hopper's idea of a nice, reasonable speed for a motor is with the clutch nudged into the highest notch, the chauffeur reclining on his back and sighting through the holes in the steering wheel and a merry party betting they won't be thrown out of the tonneau when the wagon hits a thank-ye-marm. Therefore he happens upon occasional trouble with the rural constabulary.

The other day he was haled before a backwoods judge. Hopper says he knew he'd have trouble as soon as he glimpsed the jurist's poison ivey whiskers. So he hastily abandoned his first intention of assuming a jocular air and became dignified and repellent in manner. "My name," he said, "is De Wolf Hopper."

"Hopper, hey?" asked the judge. "Hopper, hey! I got you, Hop. We got a description somewhere of Wolf, the Hopper. He's a second story man."

"But I'm a singer and an actor," protested the agonized comedian.

"Yuh are, huh?" said the judge. "Well, let's hear you sing a little."

Mr. Hopper piped up. Pretty soon the judge rapped for silence. "Lots of folks," he remarked judicially, "can sing that well. Let's see you act."

Mr. Hopper hurled himself into an impassioned rendition of "Horatio at the Bridge," which he picked at the spur of the moment as affording plenty of color and action. The judge listened coldly. By and by he frowned Mr. Hopper down.

"I don't call that actin'," said he. "That's a school piece. If you was an actor you could dance."

Mr. Hopper danced for the gentleman. The audience in the courtroom watched him critically. By and by the perspiring actor quit work.

"I gotta fine you," said the judge, "and then I'll let you go. You ain't persuaded me that you're a singer or an actor, but you ain't Wolf, the Hopper. No first rate second story man would ever carry on like that."—Chicago Post.

THEY MEANT WELL.

The Trouble Was, Though, They Jumped to a Wrong Conclusion.

It is always a mistake to jump to conclusions, and here is an instance in point: One day last summer a wealthy American who lives in Paris was playing baccarat at the casino at Enghien. The gentleman in question has a simple system of his own. He loses only a fixed sum and when this is gone stakes no more.

On this occasion he had reached his limit losses and, turning to a woman who was sitting next him, remarked: "There goes my last louis. I shall not play any more." At the same time he took a little tortoise shell box from his pocket, opened it and slipped a small white lozenge into his mouth. Next thing he knew was that he was in the hands of four stalwart attendants, who caught him from behind, swung him out of his chair and carried him out of the casino into a small room adjoining. Refusing to listen to his angry protests, they hastily laid him on a sofa, forced his jaws open and poured a strong emetic down his throat.

The consequences were so immediate and disastrous that the poor man was beyond speech. By that time it was too late for his explanation that the lozenge was merely a sulphate of quinine and that the casino authorities were idiots for jumping to the conclusion that he had lost his last penny and taken poison.

Some Dream.

A friends of our's said the other day:

"A friends who had heard that I sometimes suffered from insomnia told me of a sure cure. 'Eat a quart of peanuts and drink two or three glasses of milk before going to bed,' said he, 'and I.ll warrant you'll be to sleep in half an hour.' I did as he suggested, and my friend was right. I did go to sleep very soon after retiring. Then a friend with his head under his arm came along and asked me if I wanted to buy his feet. I was negotiating with him when the dragon on which I was riding slipped out of his skin, and left me floating in mid air. While I was considering how to get down, a bull with two heads peered over the edge of the wall and said he would haul me up if I would first climb up and rig a windlass for him. So, as I was sliding down the mountain side, the brakeman came in and I asked him when the train would reach my station. 'We passed your station miles back,' he said, calmly folding up the train and slipping it into his vest pocket. At this juncture the clown bounded into the ring and pulled the center pole out of the ground, lifting up the tent and all the people in it, while I stood on the earth below watching myself go out of sight among the clouds above. Then I awoke and found that I had been asleep almost ten minutes."

A "Cutting" Retort.

A surgeon who was very young and very shy was asked to dinner by a lady who was at least forty and tried to pass herself off as twenty and apparently imagined that being rude and tomboyish assisted to sustain the youthful illusion. At dinner she asked him to carve a fowl, and, never having carved a fowl before and being painfully shy, he made a mess of it. Instead of trying to cover his confusion his hostess called attention to it pointedly by looking down the table and saying loudly:

"Well, Dr. P., you may be a very clever surgeon, but if I wanted a leg off I should not come to you to do it."

"No, madam" he replied politely, "but then, you see, you are not a chicken."

Verbal Chiropody.

The pastor, who was calling upon a member of his congregation, asked the name of the sprightly little daughter whose winning ways had attracted his attention.

"We call her Elia," said the little girl's mother.

"That is a good name, Mrs. Donley," remarked the minister. "It has been made classic by Charles Lamb.

"Well, to tell the truth," explained Mrs. Donley, "her name is Cornelia, but its easier to call her Elia."

"I see," he rejoined. "And she probably likes it better. It is a painless extraction of a Corn."

Considerate.

A story is told in Lady Frances Balfour's life of the late General Booth. Once, when addressing a huge audience, the officers, fearing the general would not be heard, began to close the windows of the hall. Half were shut when peremptorily he bade the officers stop.

"Don't suffocate them till the collection is taken," said the general.

A Little Praise Makes the Boy a Man.

The following editorial taken from the Wisconsin Agriculturist is worth reading and remembering by the average father. It says:

"More than twenty-five years ago, a boy was reciting his history lesson in a Wisconsin country school. This particular lesson happened to have a particular interest to the boy and he had learned it thoroughly. When called upon to recite, he told the story quite well. It was a fairly good recitation for an average boy.

It so happened that the county superintendent of schools was a caller at the school that afternoon, and heard this boy recite. He was a man of keen instincts, and it is very probable that he noted that this boy had put some special effort into the preparation of his lesson that day. At any rate, this superintendent made it a point to stop the shy, awkward, tousled headed farm boy after the day's lesson was dismissed, and to say to him: "My boy, that was a good story that you told in class today. Show the same interest in things all the time, and it will make a man of you."

A few words of praise! The superintendent of the county rural schools very probably forgot the incident that same week, if he ever thought of it again. That boy, on the contrary, never forgot the words spoken and the manner in which they were spoken, with a hand on the boy's shoulder, a gleam of friendship in his sharp eyes, and a touch to the rough hair that somehow brought the tears to the boy's eyes and a choke int ohis throat. It may be remarked here that this boy did not have a mother's care.

From that hour a new determination took hold on the boy. He made up his mind that if taking interest in things would make a man of him he would take interest. He suddenly received hope that some day he might become a man among men. This was a hope that had not dawned upon him, up to this time; but from then on he resolved that he would do a man's work in the world. He did not seek great fame, for he knew his limitations, but he is today a prosperous and happy business man.

In thousands of homes there are thousands of boys who are now just at the stage of life when they are doubtful about what life means to them. They are doubtful as to whether they are of any use in the world. Some of them have never been told that they are of any value. Some of them have been told that they and their work are useless. Perhaps your boy is one of these. If he is, it is time that you turn over a new leaf. Don't wait until the end of the year to do it, either. Turn it now. Punish disobedience, of course, but praise honest effort.

Most parents watch their children very carefully. The trouble comes because they watch them carefully for mistakes only. They need watching, it is true, but we will gain more by watching for the good things they do, and telling them about these good things instead of continually pointing to their faults. Boys are always making mistakes in their work, if they do any work of their own planning. If they do not plan, and do not think for themselves, they are not developing as they should.

The wise parent will overlook a dozen mistakes in practice, if he sees the boy planning to do something of value. Any ordinary boy who is praised for what he tried to do will be certain to work hard to carry out his plans in the best possible manner. He will do his best to prove that you are right when you tell him that he is doing well. By the same token, if told that he is a ne'er-do-well, he will probably prove that this is a fact. Many a boy has turned out as he was expected to, only because he felt that this was just what everybody expected him to do. Watch your boy tomorrow for a chance t otell him about a good piece of work he has done.

Ten Commandments.

1. "Thou shalt love thy country which has redeemed thee from tyrany and bondage."

2. "Thou shalt not worship any political idols, nor bow down to them, nor serve them for their iniquity will be visited upon thy children unto the third and fourth generation."

3. "Thou shalt not take the name of patriotism in vain nor use it as a cloak to h'de thy selfish motives."

4. "Remember the day of election to keep it holy."

5. "Honor the sanctity of the ballot that the days of the republic may be prolonged."

6. "Thou shalt not kill the spirit of freedom by neglecting to exercise thy prerogative as a free man."

7. "Thou shalt not adulterate the purity of civic life by entering politics for gain."

8. "Thou shalt not encourage public servants to steal by indifference."

9. "Thou shalt not let greed for political rewards bear false witness against thy patriotism."

10. "Thou shalt not covet a public office which thou are not fit to fill."—Merrill Herald.

The Usages of Royalty.

A patriotic Scotsman was present at a meeting of a certain society at which an eminent Shakesperian scholar dwelt on the virtues of his favorite author. At the close of the meeting the Scot approached the lecturer, and the following dialogue took place:

"Ye thing a fine lot o' Shakespeare, doctor?"

"I do, sir," was the emphatic reply.

"An' ye think he was mair clever than Rabbie Burns?"

"Why; there is no comparison between them.

"Maybe no, but ye telt us tonicht it was Shakespeare who wrote 'Uneasy lies the head that wears a croon'. Now, Rabbie would never hae written sic nonsense at that."

"Nonsense, sir?" cried the indignant doctor.

"Aye, just nonsense. Rabbie would hae kent that a king, or a queen either, disna gang to bed wi' the croon on his head. He wad hang it over th' back o' a chair."

COULDN'T FOOL THE JUDGE.

He Knew an Actor or a Burglar When He Saw One.

De Wolf Hopper's idea of a nice, reasonable speed for a motor is with the clutch nudged into the highest notch, the chauffeur reclining on his back and sighting through the holes in the steering wheel and a merry party betting they won't be thrown out of the tonneau when the wagon hits a thank-ye-marm. Therefore he happens upon occasional trouble with the rural constabulary.

The other day he was haled before a backwoods judge. Hopper says he knew he'd have trouble as soon as he glimpsed the jurist's poison ivey whiskers. So he hastily abandoned his first intention of assuming a jocular air and became dignified and repellent in manner. "My name," he said,, "is De Wolf Hopper."

"Hopper, hey?" asked the judge. "Hopper, hey! I got you, Hop. We got a description somewhere of Wolf, the Hopper. He's a second story man."

"But I'm a singer and an actor," protested the agonized comedian.

"Yuh are, huh?" said the judge. "Well, let's hear you sing a little."

Mr. Hopper piped up. Pretty soon the judge rapped for silence. "Lots of folks," he remarked judicially, "can sing that well. Let's see you act."

Mr. Hopper hurled himself into an impassioned rendition of "Horatio at the Bridge," which he picked at the spur of the moment as affording plenty of color and action. The judge listened coldly. By and by he frowned Mr. Hopper down.

"I don't call that actin'," said he. "That's a school piece. If you was an actor you could dance."

Mr. Hopper danced for the gentleman. The audience in the courtroom watched him critically. By and by the perspiring actor quit work.

"I gotta fine you," said the judge, "and then I'll let you go. You ain't persuaded me that you're a singer or an actor, but you ain't Wolf, the Hopper. No first rate second story man would ever carry on like that."—Chicago Post.

THEY MEANT WELL.

The Trouble Was, Though, They Jumped to a Wrong Conclusion.

It is always a mistake to jump to conclusions, and here is an instance in point: One day last summer a wealthy American who lives in Paris was playing baccarat at the casino at Enghien. The gentleman in question has a simple system of his own. He loses only a fixed sum and when this is gone stakes no more.

On this occasion he had reached his limit losses and, turning to a woman who was sitting next him, remarked: "There goes my last louis. I shall not play any more." At the same time he took a little tortoise shell box from his pocket, opened it and slipped a small white lozenge into his mouth. Next thing he knew was that he was in the hands of four stalwart attendants, who caught him from behind, swung him out of his chair and carried him out of the casino into a small room adjoining. Refusing to listen to his angry protests, they hastily laid him on a sofa, forced his jaws open and poured a strong emetic down his throat.

The consequences were so immediate and disastrous that the poor man was beyond speech. By that time it was too late for his explanation that the lozenge was merely a sulphate of quinine and that the casino authorities were idiots for jumping to the conclusion that he had lost his last penny and taken poison.

Some Dream.

A friends of our's said the other day:

"A friends who had heard that I sometimes suffered from insomnia told me of a sure cure. 'Eat a quart of peanuts and drink two or three glasses of milk before going to bed,' said he, 'and I'm warrant you'll be to sleep in half an hour.' I did as he suggested, and my friend was right. I did go to sleep very soon after retiring. Then a friend with his head under his arm came along and asked me if I wanted to buy his feet. I was negotiating with him when the dragon on which I was riding slipped out of his skin, and left me floating in mid air. While I was considering how to get down, a bull with two heads peered over the edge of the wall and said he would haul me up if I would first climb up and rig a windlass for him. So, as I was sliding down the mountain side, the brakeman came in and I asked him when the train would reach my station. 'We passed your station miles back,' he said, calmly folding up the train and slipping it into his vest pocket. At this juncture the clown bounded into the ring and pulled the center pole out of the ground, lifting up the tent and all the people in it, while I stood on the earth below watching myself go out of sight among the clouds above. Then I awoke and found that I had been asleep almost ten minutes."

A "Cutting" Retort.

A surgeon who was very young and very shy was asked to dinner by a lady who was at least forty and tried to pass herself off as twenty and apparently imagined that being rude and tomboyish assisted to sustain the youthful illusion. At dinner she asked him to carve a fowl, and, never having carved a fowl before and being painfully shy, he made a mess of it. Instead of trying to cover his confusion his hostess called attention to it pointedly by looking down the table and saying loudly:

"Well, Dr. P., you may be a very clever surgeon, but if I wanted a leg off I should not come to you to do it."

"No, madam" he replied politely, "but then, you see, you are not a chicken."

Verbal Chiropody.

The pastor, who was calling upon a member of his congregation, asked the name of the sprightly little daughter whose winning ways had attracted his attention.

"We call her Elia," said the little girl's mother.

"That is a good name, Mrs. Donley," remarked the minister. "It has been made classic by Charles Lamb."

"Well, to tell the truth," explained Mrs. Donley, "her name is Cornelia, but its easier to call her Elia."

"I see," he rejoined. "And she probably likes it better. It is a painless extraction of a Corn."

Considerate.

A story is told in Lady Frances Balfour's life of the late General Booth. Once, when addressing a huge audience, the officers, fearing the general would not be heard, began to close the windows of the hall. Half were shut when peremptorily he bade the officers stop.

"Don't suffocate them till the collection is taken," said the general.

A Little Praise Makes the Boy a Man.

The following editorial taken from the Wisconsin Agriculturist is worth reading and remembering by the average father. It says:

"More than twenty-five years ago, a boy was reciting his history lesson in a Wisconsin country school. This particular lesson happened to have a particular interest to the boy and he had learned it thoroughly. When called upon to recite, he told the story quite well. It was a fairly good recitation for an average boy.

It so happened that the county superintendent of schools was a caller at the school that afternoon, and heard this boy recite. He was a man of keen instincts, and it is very probable that he noted that this boy had put some special effort into the preparation of his lesson that day. At any rate, this superintendent made it a point to stop the shy, awkward, tousled headed farm boy after the day's lesson was dismissed, and to say to him: "My boy, that was a good story that you told in class today. Show the same interest in things all the time, and it will make a man of you."

A few words of praise! The superintendent of the county rural schools very probably forgot the incident that same week, if he ever thought of it again. That boy, on the contrary, never forgot the words spoken and the manner in which they were spoken, with a hand on the boy's shoulder, a gleam of friendship in his sharp eyes, and a touch to the rough hair that somehow brought the tears to the boy's eyes and a choke int ohis throat. It may be remarked here that this boy did not have a mother's care.

From that hour a new determination took hold on the boy. He made up his mind that if taking interest in things would make a man of him he would take interest. He suddenly received hope that some day he might become a man among men. This was a hope that had not dawned upon him, up to this time; but from then on he resolved that he would do a man's work in the world. He did not seek great fame, for he knew his limitations, but he is today a prosperous and happy business man.

In thousands of homes there are thousands of boys who are now just at the stage of life when they are doubtful about what life means to them. They are doubtful as to whether they are of any use in the world. Some of them have never been told that they are of any value. Some of them have been told that they and their work are useless. Perhaps your boy is one of these. If he is, it is time that you turn over a new leaf. Don't wait until the end of the year to do it, either. Turn it now. Punish disobedience, of course, but praise honest effort.

Most parents watch their children very carefully. The trouble comes because they watch them carefully for mistakes only. They need watching, it is true, but we will gain more by watching for the good things they do, and telling them about these good things instead of continually pointing to their faults. Boys are always making mistakes in their work, if they do any work of their own planning. If they do not plan, and do not think for themselves, they are not developing as they should.

The wise parent will overlook a dozen mistakes in practice, if he sees the boy planning to do something of value. Any ordinary boy who is praised for what he tried to do will be certain to work hard to carry out his plans in the best possible manner. He will do his best to prove that you are right when you tell him that he is doing well. By the same token, if told that he is a ne'er-do-well, he will probably prove that this is a fact. Many a boy has turned out as he was expected to, only because he felt that this was just what everybody expected him to do. Watch your boy tomorrow for a chance t otell him about a good piece of work he had done.

Ten Commandments.

1. "Thou shalt love thy country which has redeemed thee from tyrany and bondage."

2. "Thou shalt not worship any political idols, nor bow down to them, nor serve them for their iniquity will be visited upon thy children unto the third and fourth generation."

3. "Thou shalt not take the name of patriotism in vain nor use it as a cloak to hide thy selfish motives."

4. "Remember the day of election to keep it holy."

5. "Honor the sanctity of the ballot that the days of the republic may be prolonged."

6. "Thou shalt not kill the spirit of freedom by neglecting to exercise thy prerogative as a free man."

7. "Thou shalt not adulterate the purity of civic life by entering politics for gain."

8. "Thou shalt not encourage public servants to steal by indifference."

9. "Thou shalt not let greed for political rewards bear false witness against thy patriotism."

10. "Thou shalt not covet a public office which thou are not fit to fill."—Merrill Herald.

A FREE BOOK

That Teaches the People How to Avoid Catching Cold.

The thirteenth edition of the "Ills of Life" is now ready for distribution. Beginning on page three of this popular work on medicine, is an article stating in plain language how any one can avoid catching cold.

The article was written by a doctor. It was written by a doctor eighty-four years old, who is a hale and hearty man. It is his boast, founded upon fact, that he does not catch cold. He thinks he knows the reason why. He explains it in detail in this book. Every family ought to have a copy of it. Sent free by the Peruna Co., Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. O. Fred Linstrum, 1923 University Ave., St. Paul, Minn., writes: "I contracted a severe cold several years ago. Through the use of Peruna I fully recovered. I have never had any trouble since."

Mrs. Henry Martin, La Motte, Iowa, says: "I have found Peruna to be a great remedy for coughs and colds of children. A dose at bedtime will relieve them all night."—Adv.

On Thin Goods.

If you have trouble in making buttonholes in thin material, here is a way of overcoming the difficulty: Hold a piece of the material on the under side and cut the hole through this as though it were part of the waist. When the buttonhole is finished, cut away the under cloth very carefully so that it will not show. There will be no difficulty, even with chiffon, if the cloth is folded two or three times.

A Human Churn

"WHEN the food reaches the stomach it is subjected to a peculiar churning movement by the muscular walls of the stomach"—(See Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, page 45). In the liver, kidneys and skin, the blood is purified of its waste materials—these organs act as human filters, leaving the blood pure and clear—unless liver, digestive tract and kidneys are clogged.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

is a stomach, liver and kidney tonic—by assisting the stomach to assimilate, the liver to filter, the kidneys to act—the poisons are removed, the red blood corpuscles are increased and one feels light, fresh and active instead of logy, dull and heavy. The "Discovery" stimulates the stomach, increases action of heart and arteries and is a most satisfactory alterative in blood-taint of any character. The refreshing influence of this extract of native medicinal plants has been favorably known for over forty years. Everywhere some neighbor can tell you of the good it has done.

Sold by all medicine dealers in liquid or tablet form; or send 50 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., and a trial box will be mailed you.

An Old Hymn.

I've heard the music that takes wings from pipe and horn and trembling strings.' I've marveled at the glorious art whose mystery thrills the human heart. But I endeavor all in vain to recollect some splendid strain. Instead comes echoing sweet and low a simple song of long ago. 'Tis but a dear, old-fashioned hymn. With memory mists my eyes grow dim. And, as I listen, there appears a face with tenderest smiles or tears. It is no song by genius wrought, all cunningly devised and taught. A mother-song it soothes my ear with love unselfish and sincere. I've read some poets who amaze with splendid thought and dazzling phrase. I've read philosophers and feared their wisdom as they subtly sneered. Such words, though wondrous they may be, have small significance to me compared to that old hymn so sweet that told of mother love complete.—Philander Johnson in Kansas City Star.

No Shock.

Church—I see it is said there are more than three thousand five hundred books on electrical subjects in the library of congress at Washington.

Gotham—And yet I do not suppose that Anthony Comstock would be shocked by even one of them.

Hard to Forget.

Teacher—And can you remember faces, Tommie?

Tommie—Well, I can remember the one that Muggs boy made at me yesterday.

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position.

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

TOOK MATTERS TOO HASTILY

What a Difference, If Miss Stubbles Could Have Waited But a Few Short Minutes.

"Then I am to understand that this is your final answer, Miss Stubbles?"

"My final answer."

"Nothing can move you?"

"Nothing."

"Then my life will be a lonely one and my fate a harsh one, for my uncle with whom I lived has just died and left me—"

"That fact somewhat alters the case, Henry. I cannot be harsh to one who has sustained such recent bereavement. If I could believe that you are sincere—"

"Sincere! Oh, Miss Stubbles!"

"You have certainly made an impression on my heart. Give me time to think of it."

"How long?"

"After all, why think of it, Henry? I am yours."

"Oh, Genevieve!"

"Do not squeeze me so hard, Henry. Your poor uncle! Was he long ill?"

"Three days."

"It is too bad. You say he left you?"

"Yes; he has left me."

"How much?"

"How much? I said he had left me. He had nothing else to leave. I am alone in the world now: homeless, penniless, but with you by my side—why, she's fainted!"

Like and Like.

William Dean Howells said the other day of a certain type of "best seller" novel:

"The men who write these books are intellectually debased, and the public they write for is intellectually debased also. The thing reminds me of an anecdote.

"'What are you doing, dear?' a mother said to her little four-year-old daughter.

"'I'm writing a letter to Alice,' the youngster replied.

"'But, dear,' said the mother, 'you don't know how to write.'

"The little girl, however, as she calmly continued her pencil scrawl, answered:

"'Well, mother, Alice doesn't know how to read.'"

Truly an Edition de Luxe.

The most sumptuous copy of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" in existence is being sent from this country in a few days to a purchaser abroad. The value of the book is between $5,000 and $7,500. It has been reproduced as an illuminated manuscript on vellum, and the volume is notable as being the entire work of one artist, Alberto Sangorski, who has been engaged upon it for 18 months. The title is spelled in pearls set in gold, and the cover is further embellished with 214 rubies and 36 amethysts. Altogether 400 precious stones are imbedded in the cover, each in a setting of gold.

Sure Enough.

WANTED TO KNOW

The Truth About Grape-Nuts Food.

It doesn't matter so much what you hear about a thing, it's what you know that counts. And correct knowledge is most likely to come from personal experience.

"About a year ago," writes a N. Y. man, "I was bothered by indigestion, especially during the forenoon. I tried several remedies without any permanent improvement.

"My breakfast usually consisted of oatmeal, steak or chops, bread, coffee and some fruit.

"Hearing so much about Grape-Nuts, I concluded to give it a trial and find out if all I had heard of it was true.

"So I began with Grape-Nuts and cream, soft boiled eggs, toast, a cup of Postum and some fruit. Before the end of the first week I was rid of the acidity of the stomach and felt much relieved.

"By the end of the second week all traces of indigestion had disappeared and I was in first rate health once more. Before beginning this course of diet, I never had any appetite for lunch, but now I can enjoy the meal at noon time."

Farmers in Big Uplift Meeting.

The twenty-eighth annual closing round-up farmers' institute and women's cooking school closed at Ellsworth.

George McKerrow and nineteen other institute conductors were in charge. One of the features of the meeting was Highway Engineer A. R. Hirst's talk on good roads in which he strongly commended the present system of state aid.

Resolutions were adopted asking that a liberal portion of the $75,000 appropriated for a Wisconsin exhibit at the Panama exposition in San Francisco be used in encouraging a creditable exhibit of Wisconsin live stock and farm crops.

Resolutions also stated that farming interests have not been fairly and judiciously represented by some of the state officials, and resentment was expressed against "some of the pretensions for the betterment of agricultural conditions" and condemning them as being "superficial, impractical, inefficient and expensive. A united effort to secure larger representation of active, practical farmers on boards and commissions, whose function it will be to promote and foster agricultural activities, was urged.

Hearty appreciation of his services to George McKerrow, who retires as an institute conductor and patron of agricultural activity for twenty-seven years, was expressed. Mr. McKerrow was asked to prepare a history of the farmers' institutes in Wisconsin. It was requested that Mr. Kerrow's successor be a practical and successful live stock farmer.

Campaign to Save Eyes.

The state is taking up active work in the fight in Wisconsin against blindness.

This morning there started from the the office of the state board of health the first shipments of silver nitrate to the physicians and midwives of the state, as provided by a law passed at the last legislature.

Each package contains 24 ampules of beeswax and a package of needles. The ampules have in their center a few drops of the one per cent solution of the salt. The needle is used to pierce the end of the ampule and pressure on the ampule then permits a few drops to be squeezed out. One drop is sufficient for each eye of the new-born child.

May Have "Movies" for Convicts.

The state board of control, at its meeting, decided to investigate the advisability of holding moving picture shows at the state penitentiary and other institutions under its control. A special conference of the superintendents of the various institutions will be held in Madison next Tuesday, at which W. H. Dudley of the extension department of the university and the moving-picture expert of the university will be present and explain the advantages of the innovation. The board has held moving-picture shows in the state asylum in Winnebago county and at the home for the feeble minded at Chippewa Falls and found them to be satisfactory.

Artists' Work on Display.

With 107 works by 29 painters and sculptors of Milwaukee and 16 from other cities in Wisconsin, the first annual exhibition of the Wisconsin Society of Painters and Sculptors was held in the galleries of the Milwaukee Art society, 456 Jefferson street.

The occasion was made notable by the presentation to the society of a bronze portrait bust of the president of the society, Samuel O. Buckner, by the sculptor, Cartanio Scarpitta, whose studio is now in New York city. Mr. Scarpitta himself was present.

The artist is enthusiastic about Milwaukee and its art movement. He said that the chief topic of conversation among artists and gallery operators in New York city and other places in the East is the enthusiasm and opportunity for art in Milwaukee.

"Milwaukee," he continued, "is a wonderful city. There is the atmosphere for art here, and I believe that some day Mr. Watson will be able to make good his declaration that he is going to make this city the Munich of America in art. Your lake front here is grand. It is, to me, just like the bay of Naples."

Besides the large bronze bust which he presented to the society, and a collection of his work, Mr. Scarpitta brought with him small replicas of his statues of Tolstoi and "Lady Godiva," and the original sculpture in marble of "The Last Bond," which is the young artist's latest work. His photographs included pictures of portrait busts of Dr. Fritz V. Holm, celebrated Danish explorer, and of the late J. Pierpont Morgan.

IS STILL UNSOLVED

PARTY IN POWER IS IN TROUBLE OVER HIGH COST OF LIVING.

STATISTICS CAUSE A FUSS

Price Reports of Bureau of Labor In Controversy—Republicans Attack the Tariff Policy of the Democrats.

By GEORGE CLINTON

Washington—The party in power is having some little trouble through the still unsolved problem of the high cost of living. Not long ago a member of the industrial commission reported, without supplementary explanations, that there were 150,000 unemployed persons in New York city. This the Republicans seized instantly as a basis for criticism of the Democrats' tariff policy, saying the reductions in the rates were responsible for the unemployed.

The industrial commission is a government body and the majority of its members are Democrats. Naturally there was some Democratic resentment that a party commission should say things to hurt the party without giving any explanation as to the reasons for the things said. A quick explanation was coming from the commission that the number of unemployed was no greater this winter than in other winters.

Now in the high cost of living matter the Democrats again are having some little trouble and a Democratic official in a way is charged with responsibility therefor. The bureau of labor statistics gets out retail price reports and in one of its recent ones it was shown that the cost of living is as high as ever. Instantly a New York man, said to be an expert in such matters, challenged the statistics bureau and said that its figures were too high.

Hits Back at Critics.

Now the commissioner of labor statistics, Royal Meeker, appointed to the office by Woodrow Wilson, has come back at his critics and in a longer answer he gives the manner in which the bureau arrived at its retail price conclusions and, virtually challenges anybody successfully to dispute the recently published statistics.

One thing which will probably be of specific interest to the country is Mr. Meeker's explanation of the way that the bureau gathers and compiles retail price statistics. He says in his answer to his critics:

"Retail prices are secured from 670 stores scattered throughout 40 representative cities of the United States. These stores are carefully selected by the agents of the bureau. No "cut rate" or "fancy" stores are taken. Stores that trade largely with workingmen's families are chosen. These stores send in to the bureau the actual sales prices on the fifteenth of each month of the fifteen food commodities carried by the bureau. Agents visit the reporting stores annually to make sure that the reports sent in are correct. The 15 food commodities have been carefully selected after years of experimenting.

"A larger number of commodities was originally included in the bureau's plans and would be desirable, but it is impossible to get reliable prices of fish, coffee, fresh apples, fresh vegetables, canned goods, etc., because the quality of the same description of an article varies capriciously. Mocha-Java blend coffee, for example, does not mean the same thing from store to store, or from time to time.

A Difficult Problem.

"Clearly increases and decreases in prices cannot be traced from prices of articles that are one thing at one time and something different at another time or several different things at one and the same time. The bureau has long been wrestling with the problem of getting quotations of more foodstuffs and of including in its retail price index boots and shoes, men's and women's clothing, and houses rentals. This is very desirable, but as yet it has not been practicable for reasons explained above.

"It would also be very desirable to extend retail price statistics to include a large number of cities and a larger number of stores in those cities covered. This cannot be done at present because of lack of funds."

Democrat, Progressive and Republican leaders still claim or admit, whichever way you want to put it, that the party which can present the best plan to bring down the high cost of living will be the one eventually not only to secure control of the government, but to keep it for a long time. It readily can be seen from the importance which is placed upon this matter by the party men why it was that the Democrats were perturbed when a Democratic official without any explanation of the reasons therefor said that 150,000 persons were out of work in New York city and when another Democratic official was charged with having put forth statistics tending to show that prices of food and necessaries are higher than they really are. The Democrats consider that the two criticisms have been successfully met and charge that they were prompted solely by the desire of political opponents to put the dominant party at a disadvantage.

States Rights Doctrine.

The Democratic party always has been a party of states rights and today, perhaps curiously enough, it is having trouble to stand consistently by its ancient opinions and yet to pass the antitrust bills in the form which it desires them to take. The bill which when it becomes a law is expected to unlock the interlocking directorates of modern industry furnishes a case in which Democracy is having trouble to avoid the charge that it is for states rights in some instance and not in others.

When Woodrow Wilson was governor of New Jersey the anti-trust bills known as the "seven sisters" were made into state laws. As has been told in these dispatches the "seven sisters" bills form in part the basis of what are known as the "five brother" bills intended to regulate the trusts and which are now before congress for action. It is in the application of the principles of the seven bills, drawn to meet the condition largely existing within one state, to the five bills intended to meet a national condition that the Democrats are having their worries.

Here is the way that a Republican has put this matter of the Democratic difficulty:

"The party has used the ancient and by it revered doctrine of states rights in the past to check what it has called Republican rapacities, but now it is trying to find a way to dispose of the bogy and yet keep it intact for the uses of the future."

Where the Rub Comes.

In the matter of the measure drawn to do away with interlocking directorates, the Democrats are confronted by a question as to whether state banks can be brought within the provisions of the statutes which it is proposed to pass. The party of course wants the state bank directorates separated as it desires those of national banks shall be, and the question is can the separation be accomplished without violating the doctrine of states rights.

The house committee which is considering the case has had Louis D. Brandeis before it as a witness and probably as an adviser. Mr. Brandeis is now engaged as special counsel by the interstate commerce commission in the railroad advanced rate case. He told the Democrats of the committee that there are three ways by which they can pass the states rights obstacle by the flank and yet leave it there intact for further use. According to Mr. Brandeis congress years ago established a precedent which can be used this day to justify the forbidding of interlocking directorates of state banks. This precedent was set by the national lawmakers when they taxed the currency of state banks out of existence.

As a second method of reaching the states rights matter through the federal power, Mr. Brandeis says that all banking business of necessity partakes of an interstate character, or, in other words, that it enters into interstate commerce and that this fact ought to bring it well within the realm of the power of congress to act. As a third method he says that the matter can be reached through the right of congress to declare what matter shall be carried in the United States mails. Presumably this means that the postal privileges can be withheld from any state bank which declines to comply with the law forbidding the interlocking of directorates.

Make Much of Trivial Subjects.

Members of congress, especially when they make speeches in the capitol on what may seem to be trivial subjects, make every effort to show that they are determined this country shall continue to be a democracy, "a place of continued rule by the plain people with no frills on the ruled or the rulers."

It is a curious fact that senators and representatives frequently show more alarm lest the democracy of the people be undermined by some little thing suggestive of luxury or of decadence of taste than they do over what appears to be the rapid growth of class conditions in this country and the rapid concentration of wealth in the hands of the few. The big things which threaten democracy are overlooked, but the little things are taken up on a high plane and pointed to as danger signals of a coming crash in the affairs of the republic.

They have just been having a tremendous debate in the senate over the use of automobiles by government officials. Congress, of course, supplies the "working tools" of the men in executive official life here in the District of Columbia. It always has been the custom to vote money to pay for horses and vehicles for the commissioners of the District of Columbia who are compelled to ride here and there on overseeing duty. Other officials have been voted horses and carriages, or rather, as is usually the case, buggies, without a question. In these days of automobiles and the quicker transportation facilities which they offer, naturally, enough congress was asked to change horses and buggies to automobiles and then came the protest and the great debate.

Like Nero of Rome.

One would think from what was said by more or less eminent senators of the United States from the floor of the senate that an official who rides in an automobile is tainted with all the vicious luxuriousness of Nero, emperor of the Romans. On hearing the philippics one would think that every official who uses an automobile has under his seat a fiddle and a bow which he is anxiously waiting opportunities to use for the making of music while Washington burns. These things make one laugh, and yet they are taken tremendously seriously by the congress of the United States, and what makes them absolutely absurd is that all this talk is for home consumption only, for the nature and aim of every senator and representative is to let the people of his district think that he is a plain man who infinitely prefers to ride in a street car to trusting himself to one of those devils of modernism, an automobile.

GOT NAME THROUGH BLUNDER

Tophet in West Virginia Probably Most Amusing Instanec of Error of Officials.

The history of the origin of postoffice names affords many amusing facts. Not a few of the names grow out of blunders in writing and spelling. The postoffice department presumably hasn't the time to conduct a special investigation in every neighborhood, so it often jumps to conclusions or draws upon its imagination. In the Princeton Press of West Virginia we find a curious instance of a name conferred upon a postoffice because of an error in one letter of a petition. There is a district in that state known as Hill Top. When the people of Hill Top decided to ask for a postoffice a petition was drawn up and forwarded to Washington city. The writer was not careful to dot the "i" in Hill. Instead, he made a sort of loop that was interpreted as an "e." Call a postoffice "Hell Top?" That would never do. It shocked the agents of Uncle Sam. But they thought they would comply as closely as possible with local sentiment, so they named the postoffice "Tophet." Tophet was a hill on which the refuse of Jerusalem was dumped and burned. The fires were almost continuous, and hence Tophet came to signify hell, or a place of endless perdition. Many postoffice names are duplicated, but West Virginia boasts of having the only Tophet in the land. What a difference one letter of a word makes in history! It is said that Nome, Alaska, got its name from the fact that the "a" of the word Name was misinterpreted for an "o." At that, it is a very impressive name.—Tacoma Ledger.

Ex-Confederate Pensions.

All of the southern states pension their ex-soldiers. The amount given is small as compared with that given by the United States government to the Union soldiers, but it is all that can be afforded. If you will write to the governor of Louisiana or his secretary you will doubtless be furnished with the specific information you desire. Direct your letter of inquiry to Baton Rouge, the capital.

Bewildered Young Housekeeper Felt She Could Not Be Very Wrong in Asking for That.

Her wedded days had not yet run into months, and her ambition was to become a model housekeeper, although she was so young and so very inexperienced. Her husband had had occasion to criticize the butter sent them by their grocer; therefore, determined to remedy this fault, she started, brave and eager, to discover some of the better quality.

So, "What is the price of your butter?" she asked severely of the man whose store she had briskly entered.

"Butterine, 30 cents; dairy, 35," rattled off the storekeeper; "fancy, 38; creamery, 40, and table, 45—"

She gasped, gazing blankly at the row of tubs, to each of which he had pointed in turn.

"Haven't you any plain churned butter?" she inquired helplessly, "or, I might say, churnery butter," she added, her old spirit reasserting itself.—Woman's Home Companion.

PIMPLES ON FACE AND ARMS

411 Howard St., Dayton, Ohio.—"About a year ago my face, neck, arms and back were beginning to become afflicted with pimples and blackheads. My pimples would get very large and appear to come to a head. If I tried to open them the pain would be terrible, but nothing could be taken from them. They itched very badly; I suffered terribly from itching. After scratching, the pimples would swell and after the swelling was gone my face would become very red and remain so for some time. My clothing caused the itching to be worse. When it was warm it was utterly impossible to sleep.

"I used a cream and the more I used the worse they got. Shortly after, I read the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and determined to use them. The itching stopped almost immediately. This was about three months ago and I am entirely cured now." (Signed) Miss Marguerite E. Jacobs, Jan. 13, 1913.

Mesothorium and Radium.

Mesothorium differs from radium only in price and in a more rapid loss of power. Whereas it has been calculated that it would need 1,800 years before the energy of a gramme of radium is reduced by one-half, mesothorium retains its full energy only for the first few years. After this the force is gradually dissipated, until after 20 years only about one-half of its original energy remains. Its great advantage over radium is its comparative cheapness, although even for mesothorium the enormous sum of $50,000 per gramme is being asked.

"Fireplaces," says a woman architect, "should be placed on the inside walls and grouped together, for this arrangement keeps the heat in the house and provides that, when one fire is lighted and the flues get warmed the other fires all light and draw better."

"BOUND FOR WESTERN CANADA"

A PRAIRIE SCHOONER SLOGAN, THAT STARTED FROM NEBRASKA.

Four horses abreast attached to a red painted prairie schooner, with windows and a protruding stovepipe, with the words, "Bound for Canada," on the schooner's side, was the object of considerable interest as it passed on the way northward from Nebraska a short time ago through the towns in Nebraska, South and North Dakota. After some weeks of strenuous traveling in this way, Mr. J. F. Jensen made the overland trip from Jameson, Nebraska, and with his little family made the regular customs entry at North Portal, in the province of Saskatchewan. Their destination was Willow Bunch, a district that Mr. Jensen had selected as one in which it was possible for him to work out his fortune. He located on a good half section of land, and intended putting on it some cattle that would fatten on the wild prairie grass that grows so luxuriously in that district. In addition to this his purpose was to cultivate a portion of it and raise wheat, oats, barley or flax. In short, a life devoted to mixed farming was what he had in view and it is easy to understand that he will make a success of it, and in a year or so will attach some more land holdings.

Although his beginning may be small, it may safely be said that Mr. Jensen, like thousands of others who have begun life in western Canada on no more and with probably much less, will prosper. He will not be far from a line of railway. Schools will be close at hand and other social conditions so necessary in a new country are available.—Advertisement.

The Noisy Noyes Again.

Ezra Pound, the Philadelphia poet, whose work has thrilled London, said the other day of Alfred Noyes, his British rival:

"Noyes declares that my torch of diluted Browningism, after a feeble splutter, has gone out. Now, in revenge, let me tell you a story about Noyes and Swinburne.

"Some time after Rossetti's death Noyes wrote a long memorial poem. He was so proud of this poem that he waylaid Swinburne one morning on Putney common and insisted on reading it to him.

"Swinburne tried to escape, but Noyes bawled the whole 30 stanzas into his poor deaf ear. Then, at the end, he said, with a complacent smile:

"'There, sir, is my poem on Rossetti. What do you think of it?'

"'It would be better,' Swinburne answered, 'if you had died and Rossetti had written the poem.'"

The Two Kinds.

Dr. Talcott Williams, the brilliant head of the Columbia School of Journalism, said at a recent luncheon:

"The sensational type of newspaper is happily going out. The exponents of this type used to defend themselves with the assertion that their scandalous articles were a natural response to a natural curiosity.

"But to this a great editor once retorted:

"'There are two kinds of curiosity. Into one kind we stick our brain; into the other only our nose.'"

A FREE BOOK

That Teaches the People How to Avoid Catching Cold.

The thirteenth edition of the "Ills of Life" is now ready for distribution. Beginning on page three of this popular work on medicine, is an article stating in plain language how any one can avoid catching cold.

The article was written by a doctor. It was written by a doctor eighty-four years old, who is a hale and hearty man. It is his boast, founded upon fact, that he does not catch cold. He thinks he knows the reason why. He explains it in detail in this book. Every family ought to have a copy of it. Sent free by the Peruna Co., Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. O. Fred Linstrum, 1923 University Ave., St. Paul, Minn., writes: "I contracted a severe cold several years ago. Through the use of Peruna I fully recovered. I have never had any trouble since."

Mrs. Henry Martin, La Motte, Iowa, says: "I have found Peruna to be a great remedy for coughs and colds of children. A dose at bedtime will relieve them all night."—Adv.

On Thin Goods.

If you have trouble in making buttonholes in thin material, here is a way of overcoming the difficulty: Hold a piece of the material on the under side and cut the hole through this as though it were part of the waist. When the buttonhole is finished, cut away the under cloth very carefully so that it will not show. There will be no difficulty, even with chiffon, if the cloth is folded two or three times.

Why Change?

Yeast—This paper says managers of the state railroad at Baden, Germany, have established a course in English for their employes.

Crimsonbeak—I don't see why. It seems to me that "Here's Looking at You" is no more comprehensive than "Prosit" is.

Its Ownership.

"Does this animal belong to the mammalia?"

"No; it belongs to the zoo."

"WHEN the food reaches the stomach it is subjected to a peculiar churning movement by the muscular walls of the stomach"—(See Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, page 45). In the liver, kidneys and skin, the blood is purified of its waste materials—these organs act as human filters, leaving the blood pure and clear—unless liver, digestive tract and kidneys are clogged.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

is a stomach, liver and kidney tonic—by assisting the stomach to assimilate, the liver to filter, the kidneys to act—the poisons are removed, the red blood corpuscles are increased and one feels light, fresh and active instead of logy, dull and heavy. The "Discovery" stimulates the stomach, increases action of heart and arteries and is a most satisfactory alterative in blood-taint of any character. The refreshing influence of this extract of native medicinal plants has been favorably known for over forty years. Everywhere some neighbor can tell you of the good it has done.

Sold by all medicine dealers in liquid or tablet form; or send 50 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y., and a trial box will be mailed you.

An Old Hymn.

I've heard the music that takes wings from pipe and horn and trembling strings.' I've marveled at the glorious art whose mystery thrills the human heart. But I endeavor all in vain to recollect some splendid strain. Instead comes echoing sweet and low a simple song of long ago. 'Tis but a dear, old-fashioned hymn. With memory mists my eyes grow dim. And, as I listen, there appears a face with tenderest smiles or tears. It is no song by genius wrought, all cunningly devised and taught. A mother-song it soothes my ear with love unselfish and sincere. I've read some poets who amaze with splendid thought and dazzling phrase. I've read philosophers and feared their wisdom as they subtly sneered. Such words, though wondrous they may be, have small significance to me compared to that old hymn so sweet that told of mother love complete.—Philander Johnson in Kansas City Star.

No Shock.

Church—I see it is said there are more than three thousand five hundred books on electrical subjects in the library of congress at Washington.

Gotham—And yet I do not suppose that Anthony Comstock would be shocked by even one of them.

Hard to Forget.

Teacher—And can you remember faces, Tommie?

Tommie—Well, I can remember the one that Muggs boy made at me yesterday.

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position.

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessable a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

TOOK MATTERS TOO HASTILY

What a Difference, If Miss Stubbles Could Have Waited But a Few Short Minutes.

"Then I am to understand that this is your final answer, Miss Stubbles?"

"My final answer."

"Nothing can move you?"

"Nothing."

"Then my life will be a lonely one and my fate a harsh one, for my uncle with whom I lived has just died and left me—"

"That fact somewhat alters the case, Henry. I cannot be harsh to one who has sustained such recent bereavement. If I could believe that you are sincere—"

"Sincere! Oh, Miss Stubbles!"

"You have certainly made an impression on my heart. Give me time to think of it."

"How long?"

"After all, why think of it, Henry? I am yours."

"Oh, Genevieve!"

"Do not squeeze me so hard, Henry. Your poor uncle! Was he long ill?"

"Three days."

"It is too bad. You say he left you?"

"Yes; he has left me."

"How much?"

"How much? I said he had left me. He had nothing else to leave. I am alone in the world now; homeless, penniless, but with you by my side—why, she's fainted!"

Like and Like.

William Dean Howells said the other day of a certain type of "best seller" novel:

"The men who write these books are intellectually debased, and the public they write for is intellectually debased also. The thing reminds me of an anecdote.

"'What are you doing, dear?' a mother said to her little four-year-old daughter.

"'I'm writing a letter to Alice,' the youngster replied.

"'But, dear,' said the mother, 'you don't know how to write.'

"The little girl, however, as she calmly continued her pencil scrawl, answered:

"'Well, mother, Alice doesn't know how to read.'"

Truly an Edition de Luxe.

The most sumptuous copy of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" in existence is being sent from this country in a few days to a purchaser abroad. The value of the book is between $5,000 and $7,500. It has been reproduced as an illuminated manuscript on vellum, and the volume is notable as being the entire work of one artist, Alberto Sangorski, who has been engaged upon it for 18 months. The title is spelled in pearls set in gold, and the cover is further embellished with 214 rubies and 36 amethysts. Altogether 400 precious stones are imbedded in the cover, each in a setting of gold.

WANTED TO KNOW

The Truth About Grape-Nuts Food.

It doesn't matter so much what you hear about a thing, it's what you know that counts. And correct knowledge is most likely to come from personal experience.

"About a year ago," writes a N. Y. man, "I was bothered by indigestion, especially during the forenoon. I tried several remedies without any permanent improvement.

"My breakfast usually consisted of oatmeal, steak or chops, bread, coffee and some fruit.

"Hearing so much about Grape-Nuts, I concluded to give it a trial and find out if all I had heard of it was true.

"So I began with Grape-Nuts and cream, soft boiled eggs, toast, a cup of Postum and some fruit. Before the end of the first week I was rid of the acidity of the stomach and felt much relieved.

"By the end of the second week all traces of indigestion had disappeared and I was in first rate health once more. Before beginning this course of diet, I never had any appetite for lunch, but now I can enjoy the meal at noon time."

MUSIC TEACHERS PLAN GATHERING

State Association Convention to Open April 20.

SESSIONS FOR THREE DAYS

Arrangements Are Being Made for Chamber Concerts and Recitals—First Meeting for City of Milwaukee.

Madison.—There is much enthusiasm in musical circles in Milwaukee over the coming to this city of the Wisconsin music teachers' convention, which will be held for the first time in this city on Monday, April 20 and the two following days. The convention will be attended by active members of the organization, professional musicians, associate members, advanced student bodies, and all interested in musical matters.

Owing to the recent growth of the society there will be sectional meetings on piano music, voice, violin and public school music.

Arrangements are being made for many chamber concerts, and professional and faculty recitals during the gathering here. These will be furnished by the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music under Prof. Boeppler; the Wisconsin College of Music, under Prof. Bruenning; Marquette Conservatory of Music, under the arrangement of Dean Semmann, and by the professors and teachers of several private studios.

Marquette University conservatory extended the invitation to the association, and will be the host of the convention.

Farmers in Big Uplift Meeting.

The twenty-eighth annual closing round-up farmers' institute and women's cooking school closed at Ellsworth.

George McKerrow and nineteen other institute conductors were in charge. One of the features of the meeting was Highway Engineer A. R. Hirst's talk on good roads in which he strongly commended the present system of state aid.

Resolutions were adopted asking that a liberal portion of the $75,000 appropriated for a Wisconsin exhibit at the Panama exposition in San Francisco be used in encouraging a creditable exhibit of Wisconsin live stock and farm crops.

Resolutions also stated that farming interests have not been fairly and judiciously represented by some of the state officials, and resentment was expressed against "some of the pretensions for the betterment of agricultural conditions" and condemning them as being "superficial, impractical, inefficient and expensive. A united effort to secure larger representation of active, practical farmers on boards and commissions, whose function it will be to promote and foster agricultural activities, was urged.

Hearty appreciation of his services to George McKerrow, who retires as an institute conductor and patron of agricultural activity for twenty-seven years, was expressed. Mr. McKerrow was asked to prepare a history of the farmers' institutes in Wisconsin. It was requested that Mr. Kerrow's successor be a practical and successful live stock farmer.

Campaign to Save Eyes.

The state is taking up active work in the fight in Wisconsin against blindness.

This morning there started from the the office of the state board of health the first shipments of silver nitrate to the physicians and midwives of the state, as provided by a law passed at the last legislature.

Each package contains 24 ampules of beeswax and a package of needles. The ampules have in their center a few drops of the one per cent solution of the salt. The needle is used to pierce the end of the ampule and pressure on the ampule then permits a few drops to be squeezed out. One drop is sufficient for each eye of the new-born child.

May Have "Movies" for Convicts.

The state board of control, at its meeting, decided to investigate the advisability of holding moving-picture shows at the state penitentiary and other institutions under its control. A special conference of the superintendents of the various institutions will be held in Madison next Tuesday, at which W. H. Dudley of the extension department of the university and the moving-picture expert of the university will be present and explain the advantages of the innovation. The board has held moving-picture shows in the state asylum in Winnebago county and at the home for the feeble minded at Chippewa Falls and found them to be satisfactory.

Artists' Work on Display.

With 107 works by 29 painters and sculptors of Milwaukee and 16 from other cities in Wisconsin, the first annual exhibition of the Wisconsin Society of Painters and Sculptors was held in the galleries of the Milwaukee Art society, 456 Jefferson street.

The occasion was made notable by the presentation to the society of a bronze portrait bust of the president of the society, Samuel O. Buckner, by the sculptor, Cartanio Scarpitta, whose studio is now in New York city. Mr. Scarpitta himself was present.

The artist is enthusiastic about Milwaukee and its art movement. He said that the chief topic of conversation among artists and gallery operators in New York city and other places in the East is the enthusiasm and opportunity for art in Milwaukee.

"Milwaukee," he continued, "is a wonderful city. There is the atmosphere for art here, and I believe that some day Mr. Watson will be able to make good his declaration that he is going to make this city the Munich of America in art. Your lake front here is grand. It is, to me, just like the bay of Naples."

Besides the large bronze bust which he presented to the society, and a collection of his work, Mr. Scarpitta brought with him small replicas of his statues of Tolstoi and "Lady Godiva," and the original sculpture in marble of "The Last Bond," which is the young artist's latest work. His photographs included pictures of portrait busts of Dr. Fritz V. Holm, celebrated Danish explorer, and of the late J. Pierpont Morgan.

Miss Alice B. Curtis, secretary and state organizer of the Wisconsin Woman's Suffrage association, reported the following societies in addition to those at Bayfield and Superior formed since March 6 in the different counties of the state, and is the largest number of branch suffrage societies ever formed in two weeks in Wisconsin:

IS STILL UNSOLVED

PARTY IN POWER IS IN TROUBLE OVER HIGH COST OF LIVING.

STATISTICS CAUSE A FUSS

Price Reports of Bureau of Labor in Controversy—Republicans Attack the Tariff Policy of the Democrats.

By GEORGE CLINTON

Washington.—The party in power is having some little trouble through the still unsolved problem of the high cost of living. Not long ago a member of the industrial commission reported, without supplementary explanations, that there were 150,000 unemployed persons in New York city. This the Republicans seized instantly as a basis for criticism of the Democrats' tariff policy, saying the reductions in the rates were responsible for the unemployed.

The industrial commission is a government body and the majority of its members are Democrats. Naturally there was some Democratic resentment that a party commission should say things to hurt the party without giving any explanation as to the reasons for the things said. A quick explanation was coming from the commission that the number of unemployed was no greater this winter than in other winters.

Now in the high cost of living matter the Democrats again are having some little trouble and a Democratic official in a way is charged with responsibility therefor. The bureau of labor statistics gets out retail price reports and in one of its recent ones it was shown that the cost of living is as high as ever. Instantly a New York man, said to be an expert in such matters, challenged the statistics bureau and said that its figures were too high.

Hits Back at Critics.

Now the commissioner of labor statistics, Royal Meeker, appointed to the office by Woodrow Wilson, has come back at his critics and in a longer answer he gives the manner in which the bureau arrived at its retail price conclusions and virtually challenges anybody successfully to dispute the recently published statistics.

One thing which will probably be of specific interest to the country is Mr. Meeker's explanation of the way that the bureau gathers and compiles retail price statistics. He says in his answer to his critics:

"Retail prices are secured from 670 stores scattered throughout 40 representative cities of the United States. These stores are carefully selected by the agents of the bureau. No "cut rate" or "fancy" stores are taken. Stores that trade largely with workingmen's families are chosen. These stores send in to the bureau the actual sales prices on the fifteenth of each month of the fifteen food commodities carried by the bureau. Agents visit the reporting stores annually to make sure that the reports sent in are correct. The 15 food commodities have been carefully selected after years of experimenting.

"A larger number of commodities was originally included in the bureau's plans and would be desirable, but it is impossible to get reliable prices of fish, coffee, fresh apples, fresh vegetables, canned goods, etc., because the quality of the same description of an article varies capriciously. Mocha-Java blend coffee, for example, does not mean the same thing from store to store, or from time to time.

A Difficult Problem.

"Clearly increases and decreases in prices cannot be traced from prices of articles that are one thing at one time and something different at another time or several different things at one and the same time. The bureau has long been wrestling with the problem of getting quotations of more foodstuffs and of including in its retail price index boots and shoes, men's and women's clothing, and houses rentals. This is very desirable, but as yet it has not been practicable for reasons explained above.

"It would also be very desirable to extend retail price statistics to include a large number of cities and a larger number of stores in those cities covered. This cannot be done at present because of lack of funds."

Democrat, Progressive and Republican leaders still claim or admit, whichever way you want to put it, that the party which can present the best plan to bring down the high cost of living will be the one eventually not only to secure control of the government, but to keep it for a long time. It readily can be seen from the importance which is placed upon this matter by the party men why it was that the Democrats were perturbed when a Democratic official without any explanation of the reasons therefor said that 150,000 persons were out of work in New York city and when another Democratic official was charged with having put forth statistics tending to show that prices of food and necessaries are higher than they really are. The Democrats consider that the two criticisms have been successfully met and charge that they were prompted solely by the desire of political opponents to put the dominant party at a disadvantage.

States Rights Doctrine.

The Democratic party always has been a party of states rights and today, perhaps curiously enough, it is having trouble to stand consistently by its ancient opinions and yet to pass the antitrust bills in the form which it desires them to take. The bill which when it becomes a law is expected to unlock the interlocking directorates of modern industry furnishes a case in which Democracy is having trouble to avoid the charge that it is for states rights in some instance and not in others.

When Woodrow Wilson was governor of New Jersey the anti-trust bills known as the "seven sisters" were made into state laws. As has been told in these dispatches, the "seven sisters" bills form in part the basis of what are known as the "five brother" bills intended to regulate the trusts and which are now before congress for action. It is in the application of the principles of the seven bills, drawn to meet the condition largely existing within one state, to the five bills intended to meet a national condition that the Democrats are having their worries.

Here is the way that a Republican has put this matter of the Democratic difficulty:

"The party has used the ancient and by it revered doctrine of states rights in the past to check what it has called Republican rapacities, but now it is trying to find a way to dispose of the bogy and yet keep it intact for the uses of the future."

Where the Rub Comes.

In the matter of the measure drawn to do away with interlocking directorates, the Democrats are confronted by a question as to whether state banks can be brought within the provisions of the statutes which it is proposed to pass. The party of course wants the state bank directorates separated as it desires those of national banks shall be, and the question is can the separation be accomplished without violating the doctrine of states rights.

The house committee which is considering the case has had Louis D. Brandeis before it as a witness and probably as an adviser. Mr. Brandeis is now engaged as special counsel by the interstate commerce commission in the railroad advanced rate case. He told the Democrats of the committee that there are three ways by which they can pass the states rights obstacle by the flank and yet leave it there intact for further use. According to Mr. Brandeis congress years ago established a precedent which can be used this day to justify the forbidding of interlocking directorates of state banks. This precedent was set by the national lawmakers when they taxed the currency of state banks out of existence.

As a second method of reaching the states rights matter through the federal power, Mr. Brandeis says that all banking business of necessity partakes of an interstate character, or, in other words, that it enters into interstate commerce and that this fact ought to bring it well within the realm of the power of congress to act. As a third method he says that the matter can be reached through the right of congress to declare what matter shall be carried in the United States mails. Presumably this means that the postal privileges can be withheld from any state bank which declines to comply with the law forbidding the interlocking of directorates.

Make Much of Trivial Subjects.

Members of congress, especially when they make speeches in the capitol on what may seem to be trivial subjects, make every effort to show that they are determined this country shall continue to be a democracy, "a place of continued rule by the plain people with no frills on the ruled or the rulers."

It is a curious fact that senators and representatives frequently show more alarm lest the democracy of the people be undermined by some little thing suggestive of luxury or of decadence of taste than they do over what appears to be the rapid growth of class conditions in this country and the rapid concentration of wealth in the hands of the few. The big things which threaten democracy are overlooked, but the little things are taken up on a high plane and pointed to as danger signals of a coming crash in the affairs of the republic.

They have just been having a tremendous debate in the senate over the use of automobiles by government officials. Congress, of course, supplies the "working tools" of the men in executive official life here in the District of Columbia. It always has been the custom to vote money to pay for horses and vehicles for the commissioners of the District of Columbia who are compelled to ride here and there on overseeing duty. Other officials have been voted horses and carriages, or rather, as is usually the case, buggies, without a question. In these days of automobiles and the quicker transportation facilities which they offer, naturally, enough congress was asked to change horses and buggies to automobiles and then came the protest and the great debate.

Like Nero of Rome.

One would think from what was said by more or less eminent senators of the United States from the floor of the senate that an official who rides in an automobile is tainted with all the vicious luxuriousness of Nero, emperor of the Romans. On hearing the philippics one would think that every official who uses an automobile has under his seat a fiddle and a bow which he is anxiously waiting opportunities to use for the making of music while Washington burns. These things make one laugh, and yet they are taken tremendously seriously by the congress of the United States, and what makes them absolutely absurd is that all this talk is for home consumption only, for the nature and aim of every senator and representative is to let the people of his district think that he is a plain man who infinitely prefers to ride in a street car to trusting himself to one of those devils of modernism, an automobile.

GOT NAME THROUGH BLUNDER

Tophet in West Virginia Probably Most Amusing Instanec of Error of Officials.

The history of the origin of postoffice names affords many amusing facts. Not a few of the names grow out of blunders in writing and spelling. The postoffice department presumably hasn't the time to conduct a special investigation in every neighborhood, so it often jumps to conclusions or draws upon its imagination. In the Princeton Press of West Virginia we find a curious instance of a name conferred upon a postoffice because of an error in one letter of a petition. There is a district in that state known as Hill Top. When the people of Hill Top decided to ask for a postoffice a petition was drawn up and forwarded to Washington city. The writer was not careful to dot the "i" in Hill. Instead, he made a sort of loop that was interpreted as an "e." Call a postoffice "Hell Top?" That would never do. It shocked the agents of Uncle Sam. But they thought they would comply as closely as possible with local sentiment, so they named the postoffice "Tophet." Tophet was a hill on which the refuse of Jerusalem was dumped and burned. The fires were almost continuous, and hence Tophet came to signify hell, or a place of endless perdition. Many postoffice names are duplicated, but West Virginia boasts of having the only Tophet in the land. What a difference one letter of a word makes in history! It is said that Nome, Alaska, got its name from the fact that the "a" of the word Name was misinterpreted for an "o." At that, it is a very impressive name.—Tacoma Ledger.

Ex-Confederate Pensions.

All of the southern states pension their ex-soldiers. The amount given is small as compared with that given by the United States government to the Union soldiers, but it is all that can be afforded. If you will write to the governor of Louisiana or his secretary you will doubtless be furnished with the specific information you desire. Direct your letter of inquiry to Baton Rouge, the capital.

Bewildered Young Housekeeper Felt She Could Not Be Very Wrong in Asking for That.

Her wedded days had not yet run into months, and her ambition was to become a model housekeeper, although she was so young and so very inexperienced. Her husband had had occasion to criticize the butter sent them by their grocer; therefore, determined to remedy this fault, she started, brave and eager, to discover some of the better quality.

So, "What is the price of your butter?" she asked severely of the man whose store she had briskly entered.

"Butterine, 30 cents; dairy, 35," rattled off the storekeeper; "fancy, 38; creamery, 40, and table, 45—"

She gasped, gazing blankly at the row of tubs, to each of which he had pointed in turn.

"Haven't you any plain churned butter?" she inquired helplessly, "or, I might say, churnery butter," she added, her old spirit reasserting itself.—Woman's Home Companion.

PIMPLES ON FACE AND ARMS

411 Howard St., Dayton, Ohio.—"About a year ago my face, neck, arms and back were beginning to become afflicted with pimples and blackheads. My pimples would get very large and appear to come to a head. If I tried to open them the pain would be terrible, but nothing could be taken from them. They itched very badly; I suffered terribly from itching. After scratching, the pimples would swell and after the swelling was gone my face would become very red and remain so for some time. My clothing caused the itching to be worse. When it was warm it was utterly impossible to sleep.

"I used a cream and the more I used the worse they got. Shortly after, I read the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and determined to use them. The itching stopped almost immediately. This was about three months ago and I am entirely cured now." (Signed) Miss Marguerite E. Jacobs, Jan. 13, 1913.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Mesothorium and Radium.

Mesothorium differs from radium only in price and in a more rapid loss of power. Whereas it has been calculated that it would need 1,800 years before the energy of a gramme of radium is reduced by one-half, mesothorium retains its full energy only for the first few years. After this the force is gradually dissipated, until after 20 years only about one-half of its original energy remains. Its great advantage over radium is its comparative cheapness, although even for mesothorium the enormous sum of $50,000 per gramme is being asked.

Fireplaces.

"Fireplaces," says a woman architect, "should be placed on the inside walls and grouped together, for this arrangement keeps the heat in the house and provides that, when one fire is lighted and the flues get warmed the other fires all light and draw better."

"BOUND FOR WESTERN CANADA"

A PRAIRIE SCHOONER SLOGAN, THAT STARTED FROM NEBRASKA.

Four horses abreast attached to a red painted prairie schooner, with windows and a protruding stovepipe, with the words, "Bound for Canada," on the schooner's side, was the object of considerable interest as it passed on the way northward from Nebraska a short time ago through the towns in Nebraska, South and North Dakota. After some weeks of strenuous traveling in this way, Mr. J. F. Jensen made the overland trip from Jameson, Nebraska, and with his little family made the regular customs entry at North Portal, in the province of Saskatchewan. Their destination was Willow Bunch, a district that Mr. Jensen had selected as one in which it was possible for him to work out his fortune. He located on a good half section of land, and intended putting on it some cattle that would fatten on the wild prairie grass that grows so luxuriously in that district. In addition to this his purpose was to cultivate a portion of it and raise wheat, oats, barley or flax. In short, a life devoted to mixed farming was what he had in view and it is easy to understand that he will make a success of it, and in a year or so will attach some more land holdings.

Although his beginning may be small, it may safely be said that Mr. Jensen, like thousands of others who have begun life in western Canada on no more and with probably much less, will prosper. He will not be far from a line of railway. Schools will be close at hand and other social conditions so necessary in a new country are available.—Advertisement.

The Noisy Noyes Again.

Ezra Pound, the Philadelphia poet, whose work has thrilled London, said the other day of Alfred Noyes, his British rival:

"Noyes declares that my torch of diluted Browningism, after a feeble splutter, has gone out. Now, in revenge, let me tell you a story about Noyes and Swinburne.

"Some time after Rossetti's death Noyes wrote a long memorial poem. He was so proud of this poem that he waylaid Swinburne one morning on Putney common and insisted on reading it to him.

"Swinburne tried to escape, but Noyes bawled the whole 30 stanzas into his poor deaf ear. Then, at the end, he said, with a complacent smile:

"'There, sir, is my poem on Rossetti. What do you think of it?'

"'It would be better,' Swinburne answered, 'if you had died and Rossetti had written the poem.'"

The Two Kinds.

Dr. Talcott Williams, the brilliant head of the Columbia School of Journalism, said at a recent luncheon:

"The sensational type of newspaper is happily going out. The exponents of this type used to defend themselves with the assertion that their scandalous articles were a natural response to a natural curiosity.

"But to this a great editor once retorted:

"'There are two kinds of curiosity. Into one kind we stick our brain; into the other only our nose.'"

A Message To Women

Those of Middle Age Especially.

When you have found no remedy for the horrors that oppress you during change of life, when through the long hours of the day it seems as though your back would break, when your head aches constantly, you are nervous, depressed and suffer from those dreadful bearing down pains, don't forget that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the safest and surest remedy, and has carried hundreds of women safely through this critical period.

Read what these three women say:

From Mrs. Hornung, Buffalo, N. Y.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"I am writing to let you know how much your medicine has done for me. I failed terribly during the last winter and summer and every one remarked about my appearance. I suffered from a female trouble and always had pains in my back, no appetite and at times was very weak.

"I was visiting at a friend's house one day and she thought I needed Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it and have gained eight pounds, have a good appetite and am feeling better every day. Everybody is asking me what I am doing and I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. You may publish this letter if you wish and I hope others who have the same complaint will see it and get health from your medicine as I did."—Mrs. A. Hornung, 91 Stanton St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Was A Blessing To This Woman.

So. Richmond, Va.—"I was troubled with a bearing down pain and a female weakness and could not stand long on my feet. Of all the medicines I took nothing helped me like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am now regular and am getting along fine. I cannot praise the Compound too much. It has been a blessing to me and I hope it will be to other women."—Mrs. D. Tyler, 23 West Clopton St., South Richmond, Va.

Pains in Side, Could Hardly Stand.

Lodi, Wis.—"I was in a bad condition, suffering from a female trouble, and I had such pains in my sides I could hardly move. Before I had taken the whole of one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I felt better, and now I am well and can do a good day's work. I tell everybody what your medicine has done for me."—Mrs. John Thompson, Lodi, Wisconsin.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself if she does not try this famous medicine made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.
